To create a Board of Canvassers in New-York City.

To incorporate the Atlantic Navigation Company.

Every Wednesday, at noon, was then fixed as the time for holding executive sessions.

Mr. BROOKS introduced a resolution awarding a gold medal to Lieut. HARSTENE. Laid over.

Adjourned.

ASSEMBLY.... ALBANY, Thursday, Jan. 8.

PETITIONS PRESENTED.

For a Prohibitory law.

For the repeal of the Military tax.

For the erection of a State Lunatic Asylum.

REPORTS.

The reports of the State Treasurer and Manhattan Gas Company were sent in.

BILLS NOTICED.

By Mr. VARNUM, to incorporate the Commercial Bank Company of New-York.

By Mr. HANFORD, to authorize the construction of markets in the East portion of Brooklyn.

By Mr. PRESSENBARK, for the relief of GEORGE B. WOODRUFF, late Sergeant-at-Arms, who was injured on the Railroad during the last session.

By Mr. REILLY, relating to convict labor in the State Prison.

By Mr. BAKER, to amend the New-York Police bill.

By Mr. LEAVENWORTH, to define the law relative to commercial paper.

By Mr. GREENE, to restrict and regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors. This will be the excise law of the Republican Party.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

By Mr. JOHN REILLY, to amend the law relating to foreign Insurance Companies.

By Mr. SHERMAN, for an appropriation for the supply bills of 1856.

By Mr. HANFORD, to enable the Court of Sessions of Kings County to hold sessions at any time.

By Mr. PURDY, for reorganizing the Brooklyn Firemen and creating Fire Commissioners.

The resolutions in regard to President PIERCE's message were called up and tabled.

Mr. ALLEN TERRY introduced a resolution calling for information as to the state of all suits against sureties for Canal contracts. Adopted.

Mr. GREENE introduced a resolution asking for information relative to any citizen of this State, as present confined in any other State. Adopted.

Mr. J. J. OWENS introduced a joint resolution urging Congress to protect the citizens of the United States in the free navigation of the Missouri River, and alluding to the late outrages of the citizens of Missouri in preventing emigration by way of Missouri to Kansas. Laid over.

The New-York Harbor Bill was sent in from the Senate.

For the relief of the New-York Mexican Volunteers.

Mr. POOTS moved for information relative to the amount paid and the number of survivors of the regiment.

A joint resolution was introduced by Mr. THOMPSON, urging upon Congress the necessity of providing for the better protection of life on the coast, and for giving a reward to those by whom life was saved. Laid over.

Mr. JONES called up the resolution calling on the Attorney-General for information, as to whether the present House has the constitutional power to redistrict the State.

Mr. SCOTT opposed the resolution, on the ground that the Legislature clearly has the power, and that the opinion of the Attorney-General was not necessary.

Mr. JONES did not require an opinion because he had any doubt as to the competency of the Legislature to redistrict the State, but to satisfy those who entertained different views.

Resolution adopted.

The House, in Committee of the Whole, with Mr. FLOYD JONES in the Chair, considered the Governor's Message. No vote was taken upon it.

The following were appointed a Special Committee on the memorial to protect the purity of the ballot-box: Messrs. Sherman, Pomeroy, Scott, Hyde and Rose. Adjourned.

United States Supreme Court.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Jan. 7, 1857.

The Court assembled, all the Judges present except Mr. Justice DANIELS.

Vanderwater, Appellant, vs. Ed. Mills, owner of the steamer Yankee Blade.—This was a libel against the steamer for a failure on the part of the owner to carry out a contract to run in connection with another steamer between New-York and California, carrying freight and passengers. Justice GRIER delivered the opinion of the Court, deciding that the contract was only a special or limited partnership, and not such a contract as justified the proceedings in rem, against personal property—a proceeding peculiar to maritime Courts. Where goods have never been received on board the shippers have no lien on the vessel, but must proceed against the master or owner. The agreement or obligation of the parties must be mutual, and the Court will not extend the maritime lien by construction. The decree of the Court below was affirmed, dismissing the case for want of jurisdiction.

Rogers et al. vs. Steamer St. Charles.—Libel filed to recover value of a cargo sunk on a vessel by the steamer St. Charles, on the trip from New-Orleans to Mobile. The night was exceedingly dark and a gale blowing. The vessel was at anchor at a point where it was usual for sailing vessels to seek shelter from a storm. A number of other vessels were at anchor at the same time and place. The vessel sunk had kept a light in her rigging until within a few moments before the collision, when the mate had taken it down to wipe the water and damp from the glass. After wiping the lamp it was placed upon the cook-house, and in a moment afterwards the steamer struck and sunk the vessel. The officers of the steamer say they could see no light, and were running at their usual speed—ten miles per hour.

The Court decided that the lamp of the vessel should not have been removed for a moment; but, as the steamer knew she was running where vessels usually anchored during a storm, greater caution and less speed should have been used, and that the case was a proper one for an apportionment of the loss. Case sent back for such judgment.

Peeles, Nicol & Co. vs. St. Charles.—Same facts and judgment.

Same vs. same.—Dismissed for want of jurisdiction, the amount being too small.

Wm. H. Seymour et al., vs. Cyrus H. McCormick.—The judgment of the Court below sustaining McCormick's patent reaper affirmed—omitting costs. All the opinions of the Court below on the patent were sustained, except as to a portion of the invention which McCormick has since surrendered.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Jan. 8.

Case No. 40 continued.—Argument for appellees concluded.

No. 41.—Horatio N. Slater vs. Charles Emerson. The argument for plaintiff commenced, and was continued for defendant.

Appointments by the President.

ROBERT W. ADAMS, Surveyor of the Customs at New Orleans, Louisiana, in the place of WILLIAM B. STARKS, resigned.

S. PRESTEAD HAMILTON, Naval Officer for the District of Savannah, Ga., vice THOMAS LYNCH HAMILTON, resigned.

OSCAR F. DICKINSON, Collector of the Customs for the District of Dunkirk, N. Y., vice HENRY F. WHALLON, resigned.

THE CANALS.—At a meeting of the Board of Canal Commissioners, yesterday, Hon. HENRY FRENCH was elected President, and Hon. CHARLES H. SANFORD, Secretary. The Eastern Division of the Canal was assigned to the charge of Commissioner GRINNELL.—Albany Journal, 8th.

National Convention of the Veterans of 1812.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Jan. 8.

The Convention of the soldiers of the war of 1812, assembled at 10 o'clock this morning, in the Common Council Chamber of our City Hall. The Convention was called to order by Dr. SUTHERLAND, of Philadelphia, the President. A committee was appointed to prepare resolutions, Gen. LESLIE COMBS being the Chairman of the Committee.

The number in attendance is not as large as heretofore. A series of resolutions was reported and unanimously adopted. Among them is one declaring that both justice and precedent require the passage of a general pension law for the benefit of soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and the widows of such as die; that if Congress fail to do so, the members of the Convention pledge themselves to bring the subject before the people in future elections. Congress is thanked for passing the late Bounty Land Law, and the President for executing it in an impartial spirit.

Congress is likewise thanked for conferring on Gen. SCOTT the highest military rank known to this country—his services eminently meriting such a compliment.

Gen. COMBS made a speech congratulatory of the auspicious circumstances under which the Convention had assembled, and complimented his old fellow-soldiers by saying they were in their bearing as vigorous as boys. A blind veteran demurred to his allusion to their bright eyes, so far as he was concerned.

Mr. COMBS offered a resolution which was adopted, in favor of the restoration of such officers of the Navy as were unjustly deprived of their positions by the Navy Retiring Board, and asking the exercise of Executive power to that end.

A Committee was appointed to wait on the President and tender him the compliments of the Convention, and inform him that they will individually pay their respects to him. The President returned an answer, wishing them peace, plenty and long life.

Speeches appropriate to the occasion were made by several delegates, and Mr. CURTIS, of Arlington.

A resolution was adopted appointing a Committee to devise means for the erection of a monument to JAMES MADISON, who recommenced the declaration of war in 1812.

The Convention adjourned sine die, leaving the time and place for the next meeting to be fixed by the President of the Convention.

One of the old soldiers had his pocket picked of thirty dollars.

A General Pension law such as the Convention desire is pending in the House from last August.

Indiana Legislature.

INDIANAPOLIS, Thursday, Jan. 8.

The Indiana Legislature met this morning.

The Senate was called to order by Lieutenant-Governor WILLARD. Mr. BURK, on motion, was appointed President pro tem., but Mr. WILLARD refused to yield the Chair. Mr. BURK then took a seat alongside. The Republican members were sworn in by Judge GOOKINS, and the Democrats by Mr. WILLARD. They are now debating the right of Mr. WILLARD to hold his seat, and will probably organize this afternoon.

The House organized by the election of Mr. BALLARD SMITH, Democrat, Speaker, and W. E. BOWEN, Democrat, Chief Clerk.

The Governor's Message will be delivered to-morrow if the Senate is organized.

INDIANAPOLIS, Thursday, Jan. 8—P. M.

The State Senate organized this afternoon by the election of J. S. HARVEY, Republican, Principal Secretary, and J. H. TYNER, Republican, Assistant Secretary.

Message of Gov. Hamlin, of Maine.

AUGUSTA, Thursday, Jan. 8.

Gov. HAMLIN took the oath of office to-day at 12 o'clock, and delivered his Message. He refers to the Presidential election, and states at length the issues involved therein. He declares that the true question was substantially whether the advancement of Freedom should continue to be a fundamental principle and a prominent object of our National Government; whether the line marked out by the Constitution should be followed, or whether its powers should be perverted to the extension of Slavery. He then rehearses the policy of our fathers, looking to the prohibition of Slavery in the Territories, and briefly states the object of the Compromise of 1820. He disavows for the Republicans any design of interfering with Slavery in the States, but says they will oppose in every local way its extension over the Territories. He speaks of the sufferings of our fellow-citizens in Kansas, and urges upon the Legislature the expediency of contributing to their aid should the present state of things continue. He considers an implied pledge to have been given in the late election that the present liquor law should not be disturbed this session. He recommends the ultimate submission of the matter to the people. The Governor takes occasion to answer in the strongest terms the action of the last Legislature, by which a judge of the Supreme Court was removed for expressing an opinion.

Message of the Governor of Michigan.

DETROIT, Mich., Thursday, Jan. 8.

Gov. BINGHAM delivered his Message to the Michigan Legislature to-day. He says the State debt is two and quarter millions; recommends memorializing Congress for an additional donation to defray the expenses of perfecting the Sault St. Marie Canal; also recommends the adoption of measures for the relief of Michigan emigrants in Kansas; and the passing of resolutions of instruction to Senators relative to Slavery in the Territories, and the Fugitive Slave Law.

Rhode Island Legislature.

PROVIDENCE, Thursday, Jan. 8.

The Republican members of the General Assembly held a caucus this noon, for the nomination of a Senator to Congress. JAMES F. SIMMONS was nominated on the second ballot. The election will be made to-morrow morning, and the vote will be taken viva voce, according to an act passed before the nomination was made.

Massachusetts Legislature.

BOSTON, Thursday, Jan. 8.

In the House to-day BENJAMIN STEVENS was reelected Sergeant-at-Arms.

The House then adopted an order appointing to-morrow, at 11 o'clock, for the choice of a United States Senator in place of Mr. SUMNER, for six years, commencing on the 4th of March next.

Connecticut Anti-Administration State Convention.

NOMINATION OF A STATE TICKET.

NEW-HAVEN, Conn., Thursday, Jan. 8.

The parties opposed to the National Administration met here in Convention to-day. ALIJAH CASLIN, of Harwinton, was chosen President. A. H. HOLLEY, of Salisbury, was nominated for Governor; A. A. BURNHAM, of Hampton, for Lieutenant-Governor; O. H. PLATT, of Meriden, for Secretary; F. S. WILDMAN, of Danbury, for Treasurer; and J. G. LAMB, of Norwich, for Comptroller.

The ticket comprises members of all the old parties. The Convention was generally harmonious.

The Committee on Resolutions, it is said, have agreed upon those which will not offend the Republicans.

The National Kansas Committee.

CHICAGO, Thursday, Jan. 8.

The Executive of the National Kansas Committee has called a general meeting of the Committee at the Astor House in New-York on the 22d inst., in order to report the doings of the Committee since its organization.

Meeting of the Canadian Parliament.

TORONTO, C. W., Thursday, Jan. 8.

The Canadian Parliament will meet in this city on the 26th of February.

New-Hampshire Republican State Convention.

CONCORD, N. H., Thursday, Jan. 8.

The Republican State Convention, held here today, nominated WILLIAM HAIRE, of Hinsdale, for Governor, and JEREMIAH O. NUTE, of Farmington, for Railroad Commissioner.

The Convention was fully attended.

The Weather, Navigation, Travel, &c.

BUFFALO, Thursday, Jan. 8.

The weather here is clear and cold. The thermometer stood this morning at 6 degrees below zero.

Passengers from the West say that the railroads are obstructed by snow in every direction, and that the trains are very irregular. On some roads they have not been able to run through.

The mails are behind hand from almost every quarter.

BALTIMORE, Thursday, Jan. 8.

Our river is obstructed by ice. There is ice in the Chesapeake as far down as the Patuxent River.

The Norfolk steamer came up this morning.

The thermometer at noon at six above zero.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Jan. 8.

The weather is cold and windy. The thermometer at 9 o'clock, 12 above, and at noon 17 above zero.

NEW-HAVEN, Thursday, Jan. 8.

The thermometer here, at 7 o'clock this morning, marked 3 degrees above zero, with a piercing wind.

ALBANY, Thursday, Jan. 8.

The weather has been very severe here to-day. The morning train from New-York, due at noon, reached the City at 6½ o'clock P. M.

CINCINNATI, Thursday, Jan. 8.

The Ohio River is frozen over, and the people are crossing it on the ice.

Fatal Railroad Accident.

HAMILTON, C. W., Thursday, Jan. 8.

The night express, going west, on the Great Western Railway, came in collision with a freight train, this morning, near this place; and M. L. EXELLE, Overseer of the Water Department, and Mr. EVESCOT, Express Messenger, were killed. One of the engineers was dangerously scalded. None of the passengers were hurt.

Libel Suit—Horace Greeley vs. J. W. Gray.

CLEVELAND, Thursday, Jan. 8.

HORACE GREELEY has brought a libel suit against J. W. GRAY, Editor of the Cleveland Plaindealer, for articles published in that paper during and since the late campaign. The damages claimed are $10,000.

Loss of the Schooner Milwaukee.

BOSTON, Thursday, Jan. 8.

The steamer William Jenkins, HALLETT, from Baltimore, arrived here last night, reports having experienced heavy northwest gales during the whole passage. Yesterday afternoon, fell in with the schooner Milwaukee, COOKSS, from Bankport, Me., for Buckseville, S. C., loaded with brick, and took off Captain COOKSS and crew, six in number. The schooner was covered with ice and leaking badly when abandoned.

Fire at Danbury, Conn.

NEW-HAVEN, Thursday, Jan. 8.

The large fur factory of Messrs. HUBBUEY, HEATH & Co., in Danbury, was destroyed by fire last night. Nothing was saved. The loss is $10,000, and the insurance $5,000.

Cold Weather and Ice in the Rivers.

The cold did not abate yesterday. Early in the morning the mercury stood at 4° above zero. At 10 o'clock last evening it stood at 10° above—but then our thermometer never would go as low as some folks', however cold the weather. Just out of the City the sleighing remains fine. Ferry passengers have appreciated the Arctic spell, probably, a little better than any other class of well-to-do people.

At sunset, the East River, from the Battery to Governor's Island, was blockaded by a field of ice, which made the crossing to and from Brooklyn easy. Previous to this the boats ran at long intervals.

Two of the South Ferry boats got on to a cake about mid-day, and were floated down to Governor's Island, where they were comfortably moored in for several hours.

There is as much ice in the Hudson River now as at any time during last Winter. The ferry boats are much delayed in their trips. Some of the cakes of ice, yesterday, appeared to be one-third of a mile in width, and five to six inches in thickness. The boats of the Jersey City and Hoboken ferries were, in some instances, delayed an hour in crossing, yesterday. The Jersey City ferry boats being heavy and strong, are better adapted to cutting through the ice than other ferry boats are, and usually make good time in crossing.

The Staten Island Ferry Company contrive to place the passengers on their boats in deadly peril more frequently than any other Company in these parts. On Tuesday afternoon, another accident occurred to one of their boats, which occasioned great alarm. The Sylph started out from Whitehall for an afternoon trip, but had accomplished but a short distance when she burst one of her boiler-flues and the machinery stopped, while the boat was driven to and fro by the wind, then blowing a steady gale. The boat was first blown over to Governor's Island, nearly dashing against the rocks; thence she was blown to seaward; her officers having no control over her. The passengers were terribly alarmed, but were finally rescued by a steam-tug, and came back to port, very much disgusted,—as they could not well have helped being,—with the management of the Company. The Sylph is still disabled, the other boats of the line are nothing to boast of, the Company provide no reception-rooms for passengers at the ferry dock, and the way of getting to Staten Island just now is to ventilate yourself on the wharf, waiting for a boat for an hour or two; uncertain, after all, whether you are not to be wrecked on the route. The affairs of this Company need overhauling,—particularly when the boats of the line are sure to undergo disaster in the bitterly cold weather.

Yesterday, the Hunchback started to go to the Island at 5½, (being an hour later than the time advertised) and made several attempts to force her way through the ice. A heavy cake had descended the North River and lay across the ferry-boat channel, one end being in the North River, the other fast to Governor's Island. After several efforts, the Hunchback backed out, her frail build rendering it peculiarly unsafe for her to encounter heavy ice. She returned to the slip at 6½, greatly to the relief of her passengers, who sought themselves beds at the various hotels.

The Josephine, on her 3 o'clock trip from the Island, landed at Pier No. 2 North River, as did the Staten Islander, from Elizabethtown.

THE THIRD COLD TERM.

The present cold term, which is the third of the present Winter, commenced on the 20th day of December, ult., between the hours of 4 and 6 P. M., and has as yet exhibited but one perturbation, which was at 11 A. M. of the 4th, one degree above the freezing line. The highest, lowest and number of degrees, change every twenty-four hours, have been as follows:

| | Highest. | Lowest. | Change. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Dec. 20..5 P. M. to midnight.. | 20° | 10° | 10° |
| Dec. 21..6 P. M. to midnight.. | 20° | 20° | 40 |
| Jan. 1..5 P. M. to midnight.. | 20° | 20° | 60 |
| Jan. 2..5 P. M. to midnight.. | 20° | 20° | 70 |
| Jan. 3..5 P. M. to midnight.. | 30° | 20° | 40 |
| Jan. 4..(Perturbation)..... | 20° | 20° | 100 |
| Jan. 5..5 P. M. to midnight.. | 20° | 17° | 30 |
| Jan. 6..5 P. M. to midnight.. | 16° | 7° | 20 |
| Jan. 7..5 P. M. to midnight.. | 15° | 7° | 15° |
| Jan. 8..to 8 A. M..... | 5° | 4° | 1° |

Up to 8 o'clock this morning the cold has continued two hundred and seven consecutive hours, and at 9 A. M. to-morrow will have reached the tenth section of the great circle of 360 hours. Its duration or termination cannot be determined in advance, but I have no doubt it will accurately make its sections.

BROOKLYN HEIGHTS, Thursday, A. M., Jan. 8, 1857.

☞ The Ashmun Institute at Oxford, Pa., designed for the education of colored youth, was dedicated on the 31st December, with appropriate exercises. Rev. J. P. GARRETT assumes the office of President. A large building has been erected for college purposes, besides a dwelling for the President. The institution is named in honor of the devoted ASHMUN, who gave his life to the Colonization cause.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Arrival of the Ivy: America at Portland.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN FRANCE AND ENGLAND.

THE CONFERENCES POSTPONED.

Rupture Between Prussia and Switzerland.

Unpopularity of the Persian War in England.

British Hospitalities to the American Officers.

COTTON AND BREADSTUFFS STEADY.

PORTLAND, Thursday, Jan. 8.

The steamer North America arrived here at 5 o'clock this evening. She left Liverpool at 8 o'clock on the morning of the 24th of December. Her dates are consequently four days' later than those received by the Niagara.

The Collins steamer Baltic was advertised to leave Liverpool at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, on the 24th ult.

THE CONGRESS OF PARIS.

Contradictory statements respecting the Conference, continued to abound. The principal statement was in a letter from Vienna, dated the 16th December, which intimated that Count BUOL had received from Count WALEWSKI an official notification that France could not accept the interpretation of the Belgrade and Isle of Serpents question in the absolute sense determined on by England, Austria and Turkey, and that Count BUOL had met this unexpected announcement in all haste to the Emperor in Italy.

The Paris papers publish the text of the letter.

The London Globe, the British Government organ, denies that there is any difficulty in the way between France and England.

The London Daily News believes that the difficulty does exist, and that it will postpone the meeting of the Congress indefinitely.

The Paris Débats thinks that all hope of adjustment is not lost, and that the Congress may open within the time specified.

The Constitutional thinks that the Congress will open early in January, and that matters will be settled satisfactorily.

PRUSSIA AND SWITZERLAND.

Diplomatic relations have been broken off between Prussia and Switzerland, and matters were becoming extremely complicated. No reply had been received to the 16th ult. to the note of the 8th, addressed by Prussia to the great powers on the affair of Neufchatel. It was, however, supposed that Russia and France would approve, while England and Austria would disapprove, of an armed demonstration by Prussia. Meantime, Prussia persists in her forcible measures. Prussia has notified the Germanic Diet that her own troops are sufficient for the exigency; and preparations are being made for the assembling of 35,000 men at Berlin by the 3d of January, under command of General VON GROSSER, to march on Switzerland. The Swiss are behaving with the greatest gallantry. The population is called to arms, and responds with enthusiasm. Twenty thousand men are to be put under arms without delay, of which 10,000, under General BOURBOUSSE, will defend Basle, and the other half, under General ZIEGLER, will garrison Schaffhausen. The van and reserve of the army will operate in the field. Unlimited credits for military purposes have been voted. The Federal Diet is convened for the 27th of December.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The war with Persia is not at present popular. The London Times, usually the Government organ, and the London Press, the Derby Organ, both denounce it. Many English and several French papers think it will cause another war between Britain and Russia alone.

On the 21st ult. Captain HARTSTEIN, Lieutenants WELLS, STONE, HUNTER and DAVIDSON, and Drs MACOUN and OTIS, of the Resolute, were entertained at the Admiralty House, by Admiral SEYMOUR, Commander-in-Chief. Mr. MCCROSKEY, United States Consul, and Chevalier PANTALEONO, Vice-Consul at Portsmouth, were also guests, with a circle of naval officers. The officers were afterwards presented to Lady SEYMOUR and family. In the afternoon, the agents of LLOYDS, at Portsmouth, delivered a telegraphic message to Capt. HARTSTEIN, from the Shipowners' Society of Liverpool, requesting permission to send a deputation from that Society to present an address. A reply was returned, that the deputation would be received on the following Tuesday, on board the Resolute. On Christmas Day the American officers will dine with Lady FRANKLIN.

On Sunday the Resolute was visited by some of the officers who set out in the Arctic search, in her and other ships, among them were Capt. PULLEN, Capt. RICHARDS, and Lieut. PIM.

On Tuesday, the 23d, a banquet was given to the American officers by the City of Plymouth, being the only public dinner they could attend.

The run on the National Bank of Ireland had subsided.

Baron ROCHEAU had been arrested at Liverpool for having come as a passenger in the steamer Persia without paying his passage.

There was a decided difference of opinion on the Liverpool 'Change respecting the amount of the cotton crop. Buyers said the crop was large, while holders maintained a contrary opinion. Mr. SULLY's Circular estimating the crop at 3,300,000 bales, was posted on the arrival of the Persia, in the Exchange, but speedily disappeared, and was supposed to have been abstracted by a holder.

It was reported on 'Change that the Government is arming all the gun-boats for active service, probably for the East.

FRANCE.

The private letters from Paris are not of a depending character, although the Bourse shews continued weakness.

The condition of the Bank of France still improves, and it is expected that the restriction against the discount of bills having more than sixty days to run will be rescinded this week.

With regard to the rate of discount no alteration seems to be looked for, even under favorable circumstances, till January. Money is very scarce, especially on the Bourse, but the pressure is partly attributable to operations for the purpose on the part of rival financiers. In Holland and Belgium, the restrictions recently adopted by various banks, are maintained in full force. At Hamburg, owing to an efflux of silver, the rate of discount is again 7 per cent. In Paris, on Monday the Funds closed at 68.25 for money and 68.55 for account.

SPAIN.

A Madrid dispatch of the 19th ult. reports that a revolutionary club had been discovered in the city. Arrests were made and papers seized.

The new Loan was contracted for by M. MIRES at 49 9-16.

ITALY AND NAPLES.

The principal powder magazine at Naples had exploded, and many soldiers were killed.

A Government announcement says that bands of insurgents are still flying about in various parts of Sicily, but there is no fear of a general revolutionary movement.

PERSIA.

The news is far from definite.

Advices from Constantinople, of the 19th ult., say that FERUCK KHAN, the Persian Minister, continues his negotiations with Lord REDCLIFFE and BRODERIK, to adjust the difficulty. FERUCK is about to proceed to Paris.

Persia continues her warlike preparations.

The Times Paris correspondent states that the Russian army amounts to 40,000 men complete, on the shores of the Caspian Sea, and is still in cantonments.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Liverpool Cotton Market.

The news by the Persia, as previously stated, depressed the market for Cotton, the sales of Friday, the 26th, being 7,000 bales, at a decline of 1-16 to 1/8 on the values of Wed. P.M. On Saturday the market continued dull, the business transacted being still further adverse to the interests of the sellers, the prices generally ruling 1/8 to 1/4 less than the previous week. The sales of the week were estimated. The sales of the day were 5,000 bales. After Wednesday, little or no business was transacted during the remainder of the week, owing to the Christmas holidays. Of the above [illegible] bales, speculators took 31,000 bales, and exporters took 21,000 bales. Middling Orleans is quoted at 7 5-16d., and Middling Mobiles and Uplands 7 1-16d.

Manchester, Wednesday.

A better feeling prevails in the Manchester market, and prices were firmly maintained.

Liverpool Breadstuffs Market.

Messrs. RICHARDSON, BROTHERS & Co. report a generally steady market for Breadstuffs. The leading qualities of WHEAT there had been an improved demand at an advance of 2d. @ 3d. per bushel. Yesterday and prices maintained. Corn is steady and quotations 1d. @ 2d. per quarter higher. There is considerable arrivals of Barley, which is due to the prevalence of bad weather in the Mediterranean and not to decline in the demand for the article. WHEAT is quoted at 9s. [illegible]d. @ [illegible]d. for Western Canal Flour, 38s. 6d. @ [illegible]; Ohio, [illegible]; Philadelphia, 31s. [illegible]; Ohio, [illegible]; and Mixed Corn, 38s. [illegible]; White, [illegible].

Liverpool Provisions Market.

Messrs. RICHARDSON, BROTHERS & Co. report a very dull and holders generally are willing to accept lower bidding for Pork. Bacon dull and quotations nominal. Lard in retail demand at [illegible] bidding downward. Tallow—Quotations [illegible] given; Messrs. # EUROPEAN LITERARY GOSSIP.

[illegible] Wine—Gastronomic Memoirs—Romance with Mystery of Abuse.

[illegible] Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

[illegible] lifted a heavy slab in the floor, exhibiting a narrow stone staircase, down which we felt our way—

[illegible] to turn around [illegible] with a small candle in his hand, and by the [illegible] a square hole, two feet by two, closed up with heavy grates. Into one of these I attempted to crawl on my hands and knees, but found this impossible, and I fell down flat and drew myself along, snake fashion, through the narrow passage, until I found myself in a cell, five feet by three, on the floor, with an arched roof, about five feet in height, at the point of the arch.

In this cell, in the year of our Lord 177, PAYTINUS, chosen Bishop of Lyons at 90 years of age, was, in the persecution under MARCUS AURELIUS, confined, and here, stretched on this damp earth in this dismal cell, under the rushing waters of the Rhone, the old man died. And on the other side of the crypt, in the other cell, which I also entered and found precisely similar, BLANDINA, worthy to be a saint, was kept for torture in the iron chair until she too went up to God.

I worship the memory of the martyrs of all times, all countries, even if martyrs in a wrong cause. The man that believes even unto death has a soul worthy to be remembered.

And the martyrs of our holy faith, the stern old men and the glorious women of those ages when the voice of the Apostle of the Gentiles had not ceased to ring in the halls of Rome, these martyrs are worthy immortality, and I could almost consent to build them shrines "and burn a fragrant lamp before their bones."

I have written this letter slowly and with frequent interruptions, so that it is now very late, and I must close it and sleep.

I have said I could almost worship a martyr saint. On my word if I were Lyonnais I think I should feel as MAX was just now saying, and should worship that virgin that stands up so erect in the sky above me. All day long the golden image stands firm and bright in the sunshine.

In the day I do not think I should be tempted, for the copper and the gilding are too manifest. But to see it in the gathering twilight, till, grand, lofty, as the evening closes in, and in the moonlight far above the city, on the heights of Fourvieres, where AUGUSTUS sat two thousand years ago, and whence AUGUSTUS and his race, the race of the Cæsars, have forever departed. Emblem of the visions of the Sibyl, shown to the Roman Emperor, of a religion despised and rejected among men then, but now triumphant in a world that Rome never dreamed of when, as I shall to-night, I sleep, and wake at midnight to see the stars over me, and up among the stars that calm form of the Virgin Mother, as AUGUSTUS saw it, in the very heavens, I say I am almost tempted to forget the mockery of the copper and the gold, and worship with the Lyonnais Notre Dame de Fourvieres. Good night. Faithfully.

PARIS GOSSIP.

Journalism and New Journals in Paris—New Projects and Improvements in the Metropolis—Distinguished Converts to Cremation—A Reminiscence of the Rachel Troupe in New-York.

PARIS, Thursday, Dec. 18, 1856.

A great change is taking place in Paris in journalism. The manufacturer of political canards no longer exists; he has turned his attention to the recounting of anecdotes and personalities. The public, always greedy for this kind of publication, encourage and applaud it, and thus this species of newspaper writing is fast becoming the fashion. Without it there is no hope of success. The political journals even devote a large space to this personal gossip. The canard is dethroned by the canon; public affairs inspire less curiosity than private affairs. For instance, La Presse, which has just changed hands, proposes to add to its editorial corps, a chroniqueur—a writer of personal gossip. But who is the man that dares take in hand the pen left by Madame DELPHINE DE GIRARDIN? Among the names mentioned for this difficult post is that of the distinguished critic of the Moniteur, THEOPHILE GAUTIER. The chroniqueur must know everybody of importance who lives within the walls of Paris, he must be a good talker, a good diner and a good drinker, he must be a third party to every conversation, he must be present in a corner at all family scenes worth printing, he must disguise himself as a domestic, so as to count the plates which are served, and examine the wine that is drank.

A large journal printed at Brussels, which thinks at St. Petersburg, is written at Paris, and read everywhere, Le Nord, has given up all its feuilleton space to its numerous correspondents. Instead of reproducing the miserable romances of the Paris journals, which are no longer read but by habit, and written but for speculation, the Nord publishes seven times a week the secret history of all the capitals of the universe. By means of this innovation its subscribers breakfast with the Emperor of Russia, assist at the high mass of the Pope, hunt with the Duke of SAXE-COBOURG, dine with Dr. VERON, are present at the dressing of the prima donna of San Carlos, and sup with the Queen POMARE.

In the language of a spirited cotemporary, by virtue of this new feature of journalism the whole world will soon be a "glass house." We shall soon no longer need to demand of our neighbor, "how do you do?" It will suffice to throw our eye over the morning journal. Public morals will there find their mirror. All wives will be faithful to their husbands; all husbands will give the desired cashmeres to their wives; debtors will pay their creditors; creditors will be indulgent for their debtors; so afraid will people be of finding themselves in the columns of the gossiper! Malefactors will take the road of virtue; the tribunals will be superfluous; the gendarmes useless; the executioner will take steps to secure his pension. People have braved the scaffold, but no one ever braved the gossip of a journal!

Under the influence of this new feature of journalism, almost every day gives birth to a new gazette. Among these, a journal is about to appear called Ane Savant (the Wise Ass.) L'Ane Savant will talk a little of everything, but particularly of artists and the arts. It is this specialty which justifies its title. There is not a critic in France who, in the judgment of the artists, is not an Ane Savant. The most savant, the most impartial, the kindest of all, is, without contradiction, M. THEOPHILE GAUTIER. He is perhaps the only one who has a mind large enough to embrace in one admiration the talent of M. INGRES and the genius of M. DELACROIX. And he—THEOPHILE GAUTIER—is going to have his journal. While he writes gossip for the Presse, and theatrical criticisms for the Moniteur, a journal is advertised to appear the present week, of which he is to be chief editor, entitled the Artist. M. ALEXANDRE SCHOLL, well known in the literary world of Paris, has lately started a journal called La Vie Parisienne (Paris Life.) Le Gaulois de Champfleury still lives, notwithstanding its editor lately refused the challenge of a confrère whom it had slandered.

NOVEL PRONUNCIS.

In this army of new journals, notwithstanding they are edited by men of superior literary abilities, you may imagine to what extremities their writers are pushed to sustain their character, as literary men of standing; for, as you know, all [illegible] avoid discussion will follow the [illegible] name. The route of the door will be traced out in advance. At some station the crowd will await the coming, as they do the cars on the railroad. Another proposes to transform the garden of the Palais Royale into an immense swimming bath, where the Parisians may swim in warm water. Another advocates a tunnel under the Place Carrousel, in order that carriages may arrive on the quai without difficulty, even on rainy days. Still another progressiste, in view of the fact that the temperature falls every Winter in the streets of Paris, to raise around and over the city a complete cage of glass, so that we may all live in a hot-house. There will then be no throwing of stones at our neighbors.

Among the moral, humanitarian projects in view, is that of finishing the hill of Montmartre. The plan is drawn up, and will be put into execution as soon as some of the gigantic enterprises for the embellishment and salubrity of the city now in progress are finished. The subterranean road will commence at the city octroi barrier, and terminate beyond the fortification on the plain of St. Ouen. It will serve the double purpose of an important strategic route, in case the city should ever be besieged.

THE CITY IMPROVEMENTS.

As has been feared and often predicted, a moment of arrest and of trouble has arrived in the prosecution of some of the grand improvements lately commenced by the Government in Paris. Thus the grandest and costliest of these improvements, the Boulevard de Sebastopol, has been stopped. This street, a hundred and twenty feet in width, will be, when finished, four and three-quarter miles long, reaching from the Strasbourg railway station to the Barriere d'Enfer. (It is to be presumed that the city did not put any mallet into the building of this wide road, because it leads to the "Barrier of Hell.") Its course is through the central and densest part of the city, where from six to nine-story buildings are to be torn down at each step. Three miles of this immense work is accomplished.

The temporary abandonment of the work has given rise to a singular sort of claim for damages brought against the city. Of the most important section of the road, that which runs from the Boulevard St. Denis to the Island, about one-half is finished; the old houses torn down and new ones built, and paving laid down, or rather the macadam, for all the boulevards of Paris, new or old, are now macadamized. The half finished is that next the river. The elegant new houses constructed on this portion of the street have been leased for long terms of years at high rents, to merchants and others, who are fixing themselves permanently. In the expectation of having an immense thoroughfare and a corresponding trade when the street should be opened through to the old boulevards, the rents have been fixed very high. Now that the works have been suspended and the street in consequence condemned to isolation and solitude, the merchants already installed, have combined and brought suit against the Government for damages. Their cause is a good one, but their antagonist is powerful.

The Boulevard de Malesherbes, another grand project which would have turned out of doors, among other important personages, the Princess MATHILDE, the American Minister and the Spanish Ambassador, has been also abandoned for the present. The journals state that the Emperor ordered the abandonment on account of the numerous work-people who would be turned out of home at a moment when no houses were to be obtained. The abandonment was said to be granted on the appeal of the Princess MATHILDE in favor of these poor. But the truth is, that there are no poor on the route of this great road, and that the Princess did not want to move until her new palace of the Faubourg St. Honore was finished.

CREMATION.

The subject of burning the dead still occupies the public attention. GEORGE SAND and LAMARTINE have given in their adhesion to the project. Madame SAND expresses her opinion very strongly in favor of it; she wishes to be burnt—all opinions are respectable; let her be burnt therefore. As for other defuncts, it would be well at least to have their opinion before proceeding to change the present state of things. For myself, to rot in one common earth, or to be burnt into ashes and sealed in an urn decorated with a label announcing my name, place of birth, qualities, etc., etc.,—these two alternatives seem to me equally devoid of charm, and plunge me into melancholy. For the present I bequeath the subject to my heirs.

But another plan is proposed for disposing of the dead—a plan which is cleaner, more elegant and more chemical. By means of a hideous paraphernalia of crucibles, alembics, exhausters and poisons, the body is susceptible of being reduced to an infinitely small solid substance, of which a ring may be made in variegated colors to wear around the finger. The disconsolate wife or husband can thus preserve the souvenir of a dear departed partner to the end of their lives; and if the burden of their grief should push them to a desire to join the lost one, they would have but to crush the ring and swallow its pieces in order to accomplish a hasty and sure suicide. This mourning by chemistry, this petrifaction by death, has something so fantastic about it that one cannot avoid a certain titillation of curiosity in talking of it. It would be a conservation of relics by compression.

A widow might have her husband mounted in the frame of a bracelet, which would recall to her the hymeneal chain. A husband might mount his wife in a pin, which would be piquant. For the academicians an appropriate human conservation would be a garniture of coat buttons.

There is still another process, which I only mention for the benefit of future historians. An eccentric Frenchman who filled, a few years ago, the functions of a dragoman at one of the large cities of the Orient, conceived the ferocious idea of making of the venerated skin of his wife an article of wearing apparel, which I should name in Latin if I knew what the Romans called breeches. But the process is savage. This species of sentimental tannery would have the air of ironical reprisals.

A ROW ABOUT THE CHILDREN.

The Archbishop of Paris lately discovered that the children of the choir of the parish churches stole out in the evening to go and sing at the Opera. His Eminence felt alarmed at the dangers of this precocious enterprise to the young truants. But an examination of the question proved that the little nightingales earned twenty francs a month at the Church, and forty at the theatre; in other words, they breakfasted badly at the Church, and dined copiously at the Opera. The sage prelate, therefore, closed his eyes for the love of humanity, and the double operation continues.

SOMETHING ABOUT SARAH FELIX IN NEW-YORK.

When Mademoiselle RACHEL left New-York, sick and fatigued with her American tour, her sister SARAH remained behind, to try her fortune in French comedy. But, it appears that the New-Yorkers were cold, and did not patronize her well. She made her last effort—she was going to play her finest role—but on Saturday, she had no jeune premier, to take the part of the young lover. She went to a dramatic agent, but he had no lover at his disposition, the last one, growing tired of being out of employ, having made himself a painter of houses and dead-walls.

"Where is he at work?" demanded SARAH.

"In Broadway, at No. [illegible], you will find him at work on the house of a Mr. NICHOLSON."

"Good!" said the actress, and she ran to the place indicated. She found her lover, in the costume of his new trade, daubing a door post with a green color, [illegible] the blast of his trumpet at his plump little lunch, and offering to him,

"Old boy!"

"Burr! burr!" replied the artist.

"Do you know the role of the "Games of Love and Hazard?"

"On the end of my fingers, and a good many more besides."

"Very well! I engage you."

The artist hurried down, and the next evening made his début before an American audience and Mlle. SARAH FELIX.

The young man was well raised and a gentleman: Mlle. SARAH is, as everybody knows, although thirty-eight, still handsome. They were both far from the home where they first saw the light. They pouted out, every evening, sitting side by side, the home-sickness which was devouring them. They talked of getting married. Mlle. SARAH, finding him a little young, declared that she was perhaps too old for him.

"Recollect," she said, "that in eleven months I shall be twenty-eight."

"And I," cried he, "I shall be twenty-seven in five years."

He lied for a good reason, but still he lied six years, for he was only nineteen. The marriage was arranged and they returned to France. This is the young artist, we are assured, that SARAH presented everywhere in Paris as a nephew of WASHINGTON! How this union was broken off I do not know; but I am told the young man is engaged at one of the Boulevard theatres, where he is shortly to make his début. Mlle. SARAH, you know, is with her sister RACHEL in Egypt.

HOW RAPHAEL JEWED HIS SISTER SARAH.

This story about Mlle. SARAH's age recalls another on the same subject. Mlle. SARAH is certainly a very distingué lady on the stage as well as off, but her talent borrows a great part of its brilliancy from her sister RACHEL. When one sees her play, it is difficult not to recall the anecdote of that habitué of the opera who beat the measure during the overture to "Robert le Diable." His neighbor, believing perhaps that he had the honor of touching the elbow of MEYERBEER, said to him:

"You are a musician, Monsieur?"

"Not exactly. But I have a brother who has a music-box."

For many years, so many that I dare not mention them, Mlle. SARAH would give half her experience to regain the charms and the years she has lost. They know this weakness of her's in the family, and RAPHAEL had the wit to make use of it on a memorable occasion—rendered memorable by LEON BEAUVALLET—the departure of the tribe of FELIX for the New World. RAPHAEL offered her the engagement at a certain sum. She asked six thousand francs more. There appeared no chance for a compromise, for neither brother nor sister would yield.

"If you don't bode," said RAPHAEL, "I know what I shall do; I shall engage NATHALIE; she has more talent than you, and she is not much thinner."

"Yes, but she is not a FELIX."

"Bah! Do you think the Americans will notice that? A Hebraw name will suffice to make her pass for one of the family. Come, sign."

"Never! Rather death!" exclaimed SARAH, with dramatic emphasis.

They were going to separate, when the God of Jacob inspired RAPHAEL with a magnificent plan of conciliation.

"Listen, SARAH, I have found it; I will not give you the six thousand francs, but I will bet you five louis that you are going to sign."

"Five louis that I won't."

"You will see. I will not give you the six thousand francs, but I will have them put on your passport that you are but thirty years of age; there, will you sign?"

"That's better," said SARAH, radiant.

"For a scratch of the pen, I will make you the junior of RACHEL."

And SARAH signed.

"And my five louis," said RAPHAEL.

"Here are nine-five francs," said SARAH.

"How is that, we bet a hundred?"

"Yes, but I pay down, and I keep back the discount."

To finish the chapter on the tribe of FELIX, RAPHAEL is about to be married to the beautiful Mlle. LUTHER of the Théâtre Français, and then starts through the provinces to play the great success of the Porte St. Martin, La Fille de la Nuit. A late letter from Mlle. RACHEL, on the Nile, holds out the hope that her health is improving, and that we may, perhaps, once more see her on the stage again. MALAKOFF.

FROM KANSAS TO ST. LOUIS OVERLAND.

A Stage Ride Through Missouri from Independence to Lexington—Incidents and Observations.

The first half of the way from Independence to Lexington lies through one of the finest regions of country in the world. Like the better part of Kansas, it is a mixture of prairie and timber land, fashioned in that happy medium between the level and mountainous which imparts all the real advantages of both. Riding over it, as we did, in that cool, bright, delightful morning, it seemed to us that here, if anywhere in the world, ought the spirit of peace and the institutions of freedom to prevail.

We soon began to improve, with our companions, the inevitable stage circle acquaintance. Of those who had joined us at Westport, two were pilot and engineer on the Missouri River, forced by its sudden closing to take their last trip by land; one a lieutenant in the United States service, fresh from Fort Laramie and Indian warfare, and the remaining four, spectators who had been up at Fort Leavenworth attending the land sales. Two of these latter hailed from the Old Dominion; one from Indiana, and one from Ohio. Of the original four who started from Kansas City, no two were originally from the same State, though all were now citizens of Kansas, being distributed among the States of Massachusetts, Vermont, New-York and Illinois.

The first half day was mainly passed in expressing our admiration of the country, and defining the circumstances under which we met. It seemed that our Westport men had started the previous morning from Leavenworth in the stage, under as many solemn promises from the agent there as had been given us at Kansas City. They came along very well till they arrived at the Delaware Ferry of the Kansas River, where their carriage left them on the bank and turned back. It was expected that another would be in waiting on the opposite shore, but the fact that none was there did not in the least influence the driver's resolution to return. Thus they were left in an Indian village, some fifteen miles from Westport. But they were men of energy, and finally procured a private conveyance of Mr. CHOTEAU, a Frenchman, closely allied to the wealthy Choteau family of St. Louis, but who had long years before married a Shawnee woman and reared his home some three miles from this crossing, in what is now the Shawnee Reserve. Thus provided, at their own expense, of course, they were enabled to reach Westport late that evening, where their patience was still further tried by the refusal of the host of the "Harris House" to indulge them with the luxury of supper, notwithstanding their fast during the entire day. But, next to supper, they needed rest, and immediately sought it, to be roused at 3 o'clock in the morning for a stage ride of ninety miles to Lexington. Our driver was a young man named TOM, who, with a good team, took us on to the next station. The aspect of the country continued much the same, though our road lay occasionally through wet bottoms, which detracted from its character, and over steeper hills, which called upon us for a more frequent practice of pedestrianism. When we reached the station it was already dark, and we found that no coach had arrived from the East—thus giving us no driver for the next stage. But TOM was the man for the emergency, and, on assurance of being remembered, without any unnecessary delay exchanged his team for four splendid whites, and away we went again in good shape.

But the road grew continually worse. A large share of it lay through a wide bottom, and the dim star-light proved sometimes a delusion instead of a help. Besides, TOM, who was the prince of whips, was now off his own route, and lacked that necessary knowledge of the road in detail which alone could enable him readily to select the best track and avoid the worst dangers. Our river pilot here proved himself scarcely less skillful on the land than the water. His seat was always on the box with the driver, and now he descended to the ground, and with a cheerful song and whistle went ahead on foot and pointed out the best road. His good humor and lively jokes aided much in shortening the way. When he pointed out a better track it was the "channel," if the coach stuck fast in a rut, and demanded the whole force of the crowd, armed with rails, to lift it out, it was simply "sparring over the bar." In this way, over a really execrable road, sometimes walking, sometimes riding, often holding the coach from capsizing, or lifting it out of a hole, we journeyed through the dim evening, and were rewarded about 9 o'clock by finding ourselves up the steep bluff on which stands Lexington, and unloaded at the door of the stage-house.

The first thing in order was supper; the next, consultation. We found that no coaches had arrived for some time from the East, but fearful rumors were rife of the state of the roads, of impassable rivers, and of runaway teams which had "smashed up" one or two at the coaches belonging on the line. The case was critical. TOM would go on still another stage if we said so; but he did not make any pretence to knowing the road. A majority of us inclined to stay over and take an early start in the morning, if we could be sure of getting it. Our coach was in TOM's charge, and no other was on hand; this he promised us we should have, and so it was finally settled; and about 11 o'clock I retired to a very dirty room, but managed to get, notwithstanding, a very sound sleep.

In the morning it was raining and freezing. The rain soon tapered off, and we were ready to start. But still no coach came for us. To our inquiries of the agent, he replied always that it would be along in a few moments. "Had any coach arrived from the East during the night?" we inquired. He replied "No," which we afterwards found to be false. TOM had gone back, but had left us his coach as agreed. Mr. W., who had been over the road before, said that it was the custom to travel nights and lie still during the day! And so it almost proved, for it was not till 11 o'clock that the coach came, and we were finally enabled to bid a willing adieu to Lexington.

One or two incidents in our stay there are noteworthy. The state of public feeling was changed almost miraculously from its condition a few months since. Here, in the very centre of fire-eating border-ruffianism, where Sharp's Rifles were forcibly taken from steamboats, and emigrants disarmed and turned back on their way; where Gov. ROBINSON was taken off a boat in May last by a mob, and sent back to Kansas—in this very Lexington, one would not now mistrust that the public excitement had ever been such as to compel even old and conservative citizens to its measures.

Several of us were known to be Northerners, yet not a word of incivility was offered. On the contrary, all was courtesy and conciliation. The only political conversation I heard, was a narrative over the office fire, of his wonderful adventures in Kansas, by a young man named ATCHISON, son of one of the first citizens of Lexington, who, while a resident of that city, was elected a member, and afterwards Speaker pro tem. of the bogus Legislature, and who has again been returned to the same august body. To be sure, he calls his present residence Lecompton, though it happens that Lexington claims the most of his time. I was greatly amused at his story, and especially at his claims to conservatism—a quality about as distinguishing in him as in Hon. P. S. BROOKS, or any other disciple of the same faith.

Having occasion in the morning to purchase an article in the shoe line, I was amazed to find that the second city in Missouri, population about 4,000, contained but one exclusively shoe store! and that would be entombed a small establishment in any place of equal size in the East.

RECOLLECTIONS OF CHIEF-JUSTICE MARSHALL.—In Bishop MEADE's Notices of the Old Churches in Virginia, published in the Southern Churchman, are the following recollections of the late Chief-Justice MARSHALL:

"I have mentioned before that Judge MARSHALL had no hope of the revival of the Church in Virginia, though contributing liberally to the efforts made for it. He lived to see himself mistaken, and to unite with his children and grandchildren in the services of our reorganized Church, in the very place of his nativity and the scene of his early life. In my frequent visits to Cool Spring and Oak Hill, I often met with him, as I had done at my father's house and other places in Frederick in my dear boyish days. Though not a communicant, he was the sincere friend to religion and the Episcopal Church. I can never forget how he would ejaculate his call from behind the wide-brim fireplace without leaving off Coke during morning hours, in the midst of his numerous and grand-children and his old neighbors. In Richmond he always set an example to the gentlemen [illegible] Rose, when that [illegible] house.

But the [illegible] of Lyons [illegible]

We [illegible] lifted a heavy slab in the floor, exhibiting a narrow stone staircase, down which we felt our way—

[illegible] to turn around [illegible] with a small candle in his hand, and by the [illegible] a square hole, two feet by two, closed up with heavy grates. Into one of these I attempted to crawl on my hands and knees, but found this impossible, and I fell down flat and drew myself along, snake fashion, through the narrow passage, until I found myself in a cell, five feet by three, on the floor, with an arched roof, about five feet in height, at the point of the arch.

In this cell, in the year of our Lord 177, PAYTINUS, chosen Bishop of Lyons at 90 years of age, was, in the persecution under MARCUS AURELIUS, confined, and here, stretched on this damp earth in this dismal cell, under the rushing waters of the Rhone, the old man died. And on the other side of the crypt, in the other cell, which I also entered and found precisely similar, BLANDINA, worthy to be a saint, was kept for torture in the iron chair until she too went up to God.

I worship the memory of the martyrs of all times, all countries, even if martyrs in a wrong cause. The man that believes even unto death has a soul worthy to be remembered.

And the martyrs of our holy faith, the stern old men and the glorious women of those ages when the voice of the Apostle of the Gentiles had not ceased to ring in the halls of Rome, these martyrs are worthy immortality, and I could almost consent to build them shrines "and burn a fragrant lamp before their bones."

I have written this letter slowly and with frequent interruptions, so that it is now very late, and I must close it and sleep.

I have said I could almost worship a martyr saint. On my word if I were Lyonnais I think I should feel as MAX was just now saying, and should worship that virgin that stands up so erect in the sky above me. All day long the golden image stands firm and bright in the sunshine.

In the day I do not think I should be tempted, for the copper and the gilding are too manifest. But to see it in the gathering twilight, till, grand, lofty, as the evening closes in, and in the moonlight far above the city, on the heights of Fourvieres, where AUGUSTUS sat two thousand years ago, and whence AUGUSTUS and his race, the race of the Cæsars, have forever departed. Emblem of the visions of the Sibyl, shown to the Roman Emperor, of a religion despised and rejected among men then, but now triumphant in a world that Rome never dreamed of when, as I shall to-night, I sleep, and wake at midnight to see the stars over me, and up among the stars that calm form of the Virgin Mother, as AUGUSTUS saw it, in the very heavens, I say I am almost tempted to forget the mockery of the copper and the gold, and worship with the Lyonnais Notre Dame de Fourvieres. Good night. Faithfully.

PARIS GOSSIP.

Journalism and New Journals in Paris—New Projects and Improvements in the Metropolis—Distinguished Converts to Cremation—A Reminiscence of the Rachel Troupe in New-York.

PARIS, Thursday, Dec. 18, 1856.

A great change is taking place in Paris in journalism. The manufacturer of political canards no longer exists; he has turned his attention to the recounting of anecdotes and personalities. The public, always greedy for this kind of publication, encourage and applaud it, and thus this species of newspaper writing is fast becoming the fashion. Without it there is no hope of success. The political journals even devote a large space to this personal gossip. The canard is dethroned by the canon; public affairs inspire less curiosity than private affairs. For instance, La Presse, which has just changed hands, proposes to add to its editorial corps, a chroniqueur—a writer of personal gossip. But who is the man that dares take in hand the pen left by Madame DELPHINE DE GIRARDIN? Among the names mentioned for this difficult post is that of the distinguished critic of the Moniteur, THEOPHILE GAUTIER. The chroniqueur must know everybody of importance who lives within the walls of Paris, he must be a good talker, a good diner and a good drinker, he must be a third party to every conversation, he must be present in a corner at all family scenes worth printing, he must disguise himself as a domestic, so as to count the plates which are served, and examine the wine that is drank.

A large journal printed at Brussels, which thinks at St. Petersburg, is written at Paris, and read everywhere, Le Nord, has given up all its feuilleton space to its numerous correspondents. Instead of reproducing the miserable romances of the Paris journals, which are no longer read but by habit, and written but for speculation, the Nord publishes seven times a week the secret history of all the capitals of the universe. By means of this innovation its subscribers breakfast with the Emperor of Russia, assist at the high mass of the Pope, hunt with the Duke of SAXE-COBOURG, dine with Dr. VERON, are present at the dressing of the prima donna of San Carlos, and sup with the Queen POMARE.

In the language of a spirited cotemporary, by virtue of this new feature of journalism the whole world will soon be a "glass house." We shall soon no longer need to demand of our neighbor, "how do you do?" It will suffice to throw our eye over the morning journal. Public morals will there find their mirror. All wives will be faithful to their husbands; all husbands will give the desired cashmeres to their wives; debtors will pay their creditors; creditors will be indulgent for their debtors; so afraid will people be of finding themselves in the columns of the gossiper! Malefactors will take the road of virtue; the tribunals will be superfluous; the gendarmes useless; the executioner will take steps to secure his pension. People have braved the scaffold, but no one ever braved the gossip of a journal!

Under the influence of this new feature of journalism, almost every day gives birth to a new gazette. Among these, a journal is about to appear called Ane Savant (the Wise Ass.) L'Ane Savant will talk a little of everything, but particularly of artists and the arts. It is this specialty which justifies its title. There is not a critic in France who, in the judgment of the artists, is not an Ane Savant. The most savant, the most impartial, the kindest of all, is, without contradiction, M. THEOPHILE GAUTIER. He is perhaps the only one who has a mind large enough to embrace in one admiration the talent of M. INGRES and the genius of M. DELACROIX. And he—THEOPHILE GAUTIER—is going to have his journal. While he writes gossip for the Presse, and theatrical criticisms for the Moniteur, a journal is advertised to appear the present week, of which he is to be chief editor, entitled the Artist. M. ALEXANDRE SCHOLL, well known in the literary world of Paris, has lately started a journal called La Vie Parisienne (Paris Life.) Le Gaulois de Champfleury still lives, notwithstanding its editor lately refused the challenge of a confrère whom it had slandered.

NOVEL PRONUNCIS.

In this army of new journals, notwithstanding they are edited by men of superior literary abilities, you may imagine to what extremities their writers are pushed to sustain their character, as literary men of standing; for, as you know, all [illegible] avoid discussion will follow the [illegible] name. The route of the door will be traced out in advance. At some station the crowd will await the coming, as they do the cars on the railroad. Another proposes to transform the garden of the Palais Royale into an immense swimming bath, where the Parisians may swim in warm water. Another advocates a tunnel under the Place Carrousel, in order that carriages may arrive on the quai without difficulty, even on rainy days. Still another progressiste, in view of the fact that the temperature falls every Winter in the streets of Paris, to raise around and over the city a complete cage of glass, so that we may all live in a hot-house. There will then be no throwing of stones at our neighbors.

Among the moral, humanitarian projects in view, is that of finishing the hill of Montmartre. The plan is drawn up, and will be put into execution as soon as some of the gigantic enterprises for the embellishment and salubrity of the city now in progress are finished. The subterranean road will commence at the city octroi barrier, and terminate beyond the fortification on the plain of St. Ouen. It will serve the double purpose of an important strategic route, in case the city should ever be besieged.

THE CITY IMPROVEMENTS.

As has been feared and often predicted, a moment of arrest and of trouble has arrived in the prosecution of some of the grand improvements lately commenced by the Government in Paris. Thus the grandest and costliest of these improvements, the Boulevard de Sebastopol, has been stopped. This street, a hundred and twenty feet in width, will be, when finished, four and three-quarter miles long, reaching from the Strasbourg railway station to the Barriere d'Enfer. (It is to be presumed that the city did not put any mallet into the building of this wide road, because it leads to the "Barrier of Hell.") Its course is through the central and densest part of the city, where from six to nine-story buildings are to be torn down at each step. Three miles of this immense work is accomplished.

The temporary abandonment of the work has given rise to a singular sort of claim for damages brought against the city. Of the most important section of the road, that which runs from the Boulevard St. Denis to the Island, about one-half is finished; the old houses torn down and new ones built, and paving laid down, or rather the macadam, for all the boulevards of Paris, new or old, are now macadamized. The half finished is that next the river. The elegant new houses constructed on this portion of the street have been leased for long terms of years at high rents, to merchants and others, who are fixing themselves permanently. In the expectation of having an immense thoroughfare and a corresponding trade when the street should be opened through to the old boulevards, the rents have been fixed very high. Now that the works have been suspended and the street in consequence condemned to isolation and solitude, the merchants already installed, have combined and brought suit against the Government for damages. Their cause is a good one, but their antagonist is powerful.

The Boulevard de Malesherbes, another grand project which would have turned out of doors, among other important personages, the Princess MATHILDE, the American Minister and the Spanish Ambassador, has been also abandoned for the present. The journals state that the Emperor ordered the abandonment on account of the numerous work-people who would be turned out of home at a moment when no houses were to be obtained. The abandonment was said to be granted on the appeal of the Princess MATHILDE in favor of these poor. But the truth is, that there are no poor on the route of this great road, and that the Princess did not want to move until her new palace of the Faubourg St. Honore was finished.

CREMATION.

The subject of burning the dead still occupies the public attention. GEORGE SAND and LAMARTINE have given in their adhesion to the project. Madame SAND expresses her opinion very strongly in favor of it; she wishes to be burnt—all opinions are respectable; let her be burnt therefore. As for other defuncts, it would be well at least to have their opinion before proceeding to change the present state of things. For myself, to rot in one common earth, or to be burnt into ashes and sealed in an urn decorated with a label announcing my name, place of birth, qualities, etc., etc.,—these two alternatives seem to me equally devoid of charm, and plunge me into melancholy. For the present I bequeath the subject to my heirs.

But another plan is proposed for disposing of the dead—a plan which is cleaner, more elegant and more chemical. By means of a hideous paraphernalia of crucibles, alembics, exhausters and poisons, the body is susceptible of being reduced to an infinitely small solid substance, of which a ring may be made in variegated colors to wear around the finger. The disconsolate wife or husband can thus preserve the souvenir of a dear departed partner to the end of their lives; and if the burden of their grief should push them to a desire to join the lost one, they would have but to crush the ring and swallow its pieces in order to accomplish a hasty and sure suicide. This mourning by chemistry, this petrifaction by death, has something so fantastic about it that one cannot avoid a certain titillation of curiosity in talking of it. It would be a conservation of relics by compression.

A widow might have her husband mounted in the frame of a bracelet, which would recall to her the hymeneal chain. A husband might mount his wife in a pin, which would be piquant. For the academicians an appropriate human conservation would be a garniture of coat buttons.

There is still another process, which I only mention for the benefit of future historians. An eccentric Frenchman who filled, a few years ago, the functions of a dragoman at one of the large cities of the Orient, conceived the ferocious idea of making of the venerated skin of his wife an article of wearing apparel, which I should name in Latin if I knew what the Romans called breeches. But the process is savage. This species of sentimental tannery would have the air of ironical reprisals.

A ROW ABOUT THE CHILDREN.

The Archbishop of Paris lately discovered that the children of the choir of the parish churches stole out in the evening to go and sing at the Opera. His Eminence felt alarmed at the dangers of this precocious enterprise to the young truants. But an examination of the question proved that the little nightingales earned twenty francs a month at the Church, and forty at the theatre; in other words, they breakfasted badly at the Church, and dined copiously at the Opera. The sage prelate, therefore, closed his eyes for the love of humanity, and the double operation continues.

SOMETHING ABOUT SARAH FELIX IN NEW-YORK.

When Mademoiselle RACHEL left New-York, sick and fatigued with her American tour, her sister SARAH remained behind, to try her fortune in French comedy. But, it appears that the New-Yorkers were cold, and did not patronize her well. She made her last effort—she was going to play her finest role—but on Saturday, she had no jeune premier, to take the part of the young lover. She went to a dramatic agent, but he had no lover at his disposition, the last one, growing tired of being out of employ, having made himself a painter of houses and dead-walls.

"Where is he at work?" demanded SARAH.

"In Broadway, at No. [illegible], you will find him at work on the house of a Mr. NICHOLSON."

"Good!" said the actress, and she ran to the place indicated. She found her lover, in the costume of his new trade, daubing a door post with a green color, [illegible] the blast of his trumpet at his plump little lunch, and offering to him,

"Old boy!"

"Burr! burr!" replied the artist.

"Do you know the role of the "Games of Love and Hazard?"

"On the end of my fingers, and a good many more besides."

"Very well! I engage you."

The artist hurried down, and the next evening made his début before an American audience and Mlle. SARAH FELIX.

The young man was well raised and a gentleman: Mlle. SARAH is, as everybody knows, although thirty-eight, still handsome. They were both far from the home where they first saw the light. They pouted out, every evening, sitting side by side, the home-sickness which was devouring them. They talked of getting married. Mlle. SARAH, finding him a little young, declared that she was perhaps too old for him.

"Recollect," she said, "that in eleven months I shall be twenty-eight."

"And I," cried he, "I shall be twenty-seven in five years."

He lied for a good reason, but still he lied six years, for he was only nineteen. The marriage was arranged and they returned to France. This is the young artist, we are assured, that SARAH presented everywhere in Paris as a nephew of WASHINGTON! How this union was broken off I do not know; but I am told the young man is engaged at one of the Boulevard theatres, where he is shortly to make his début. Mlle. SARAH, you know, is with her sister RACHEL in Egypt.

HOW RAPHAEL JEWED HIS SISTER SARAH.

This story about Mlle. SARAH's age recalls another on the same subject. Mlle. SARAH is certainly a very distingué lady on the stage as well as off, but her talent borrows a great part of its brilliancy from her sister RACHEL. When one sees her play, it is difficult not to recall the anecdote of that habitué of the opera who beat the measure during the overture to "Robert le Diable." His neighbor, believing perhaps that he had the honor of touching the elbow of MEYERBEER, said to him:

"You are a musician, Monsieur?"

"Not exactly. But I have a brother who has a music-box."

For many years, so many that I dare not mention them, Mlle. SARAH would give half her experience to regain the charms and the years she has lost. They know this weakness of her's in the family, and RAPHAEL had the wit to make use of it on a memorable occasion—rendered memorable by LEON BEAUVALLET—the departure of the tribe of FELIX for the New World. RAPHAEL offered her the engagement at a certain sum. She asked six thousand francs more. There appeared no chance for a compromise, for neither brother nor sister would yield.

"If you don't bode," said RAPHAEL, "I know what I shall do; I shall engage NATHALIE; she has more talent than you, and she is not much thinner."

"Yes, but she is not a FELIX."

"Bah! Do you think the Americans will notice that? A Hebraw name will suffice to make her pass for one of the family. Come, sign."

"Never! Rather death!" exclaimed SARAH, with dramatic emphasis.

They were going to separate, when the God of Jacob inspired RAPHAEL with a magnificent plan of conciliation.

"Listen, SARAH, I have found it; I will not give you the six thousand francs, but I will bet you five louis that you are going to sign."

"Five louis that I won't."

"You will see. I will not give you the six thousand francs, but I will have them put on your passport that you are but thirty years of age; there, will you sign?"

"That's better," said SARAH, radiant.

"For a scratch of the pen, I will make you the junior of RACHEL."

And SARAH signed.

"And my five louis," said RAPHAEL.

"Here are nine-five francs," said SARAH.

"How is that, we bet a hundred?"

"Yes, but I pay down, and I keep back the discount."

To finish the chapter on the tribe of FELIX, RAPHAEL is about to be married to the beautiful Mlle. LUTHER of the Théâtre Français, and then starts through the provinces to play the great success of the Porte St. Martin, La Fille de la Nuit. A late letter from Mlle. RACHEL, on the Nile, holds out the hope that her health is improving, and that we may, perhaps, once more see her on the stage again. MALAKOFF.

FROM KANSAS TO ST. LOUIS OVERLAND.

A Stage Ride Through Missouri from Independence to Lexington—Incidents and Observations.

The first half of the way from Independence to Lexington lies through

[illegible]

[illegible] Archbishop and the above-mentioned individual, is that the Archbishop sails into the [illegible] of the Catholic press, because they disgust [illegible] show signs of fight. And, again, deals [illegible] blows against them while they agree and manifest to the world harmony of feeling and unity of opinion. He knocks [illegible] nearly annihilates the editor of the Cath. [illegible] "that the success of religion in this country depends on the influx of immigrants."

[illegible] times on Dr. Brownson, a convert to [illegible] of Protestant descent, and almost [illegible] for no other crime so many [illegible] Doctor's candid, though waggish admission, in the last number of his Review, that he possesses in a supereminent degree the three Divine virtues of Faith, Hope, and Charity; and for asserting "That the success of [illegible] depends on the influx of emigrants, and [illegible] Church will progress in proportion as she [illegible] and presented to the world by natives of the soil." Leaving both as dead, he lashes [illegible] of the Freeman's Journal, but handles him with gloves on, such as he wore when he held [illegible] Benson" out of the window, and [illegible] dropped him into oblivion.

[illegible] letting poor Master MacMaster go [illegible] the life out of him, tells him that [illegible] as bad as the others, and that if he [illegible] would his manners he knows the doom [illegible] him. Though the only crime of which [illegible] him guilty is "That for several years [illegible] never deviated from the principles of [illegible], order and social interests."

Having annihilated the three representatives of the Catholic Press, or at least reduced their loud and [illegible] batteries to silence, he proudly [illegible] over the field of battle, and, in the flush of victory, asks of his prostrate antagonist several questions, in tones of contemptuous defiance, and concludes the campaign by granting a truce, and [illegible] up the articles of a lasting peace. It is, however, in these questions of the Archbishop to his fallen adversaries, and in the articles of peace which he has graciously granted to them, that we are to discover the true cause of his indignation against them, and the real nature of their offence. When Dr. Brownson advised all whom it might concern "To cheer on the young, lay and ecclesiastical, in their zeal, activity and enterprise, and continue all against snubbing them for their inexperience, quizzing them for their zeal, damping their hopes, pouring cold water on their enthusiasm, and brushing the flowers from their young hopes" which he asserted "That to do the work and advance the cause of religion, we wanted men of fresh hearts, of boldness, of energy, of enterprise and of positive virtues, and not simply good easy men, whose chief merit is their inability to do harm, and whose study is to keep things quiet and as they are," he never imagined that any individual should feel greatly offended, or that any person would jump indignantly into print, and ask distinctly, in the face of a community wide awake to all that is going on, such questions as "When, where and by whom." The Archbishop knows very well that his questions cannot be answered by any Catholic, without giving great offence, and without fixing too intensely the already too keen attention of the Catholic community on what is transpiring within it. When these editors commended bishops and priests for their zeal, their disinterestedness, and their self-sacrifice; or for their attainments, boldness, and energy, they never intended, nor do they now believe, that they were guilty of any grievous sin or that they did more than their duty, even if some destitute of these virtues were passed over in silence, for they know too well that we cannot long impose on the community by fulsome and premature panegyric [illegible] and unjust censure.

But why do not these editors proclaim throughout the length and breadth of the land; why do they not convey on the wings of the press to the [illegible] of Europe; why do they not tell the priests, bishops and cardinals; yes, even the pope himself, "what glorious things have been done here for the interests of religion and the cause of afflicted humanity?" instead of whining over the detection of a few old Catholics, which might have happened in any country, or wailing over the loss of some hopeless young, "who may by chance have never to have belonged to the church?" Here the Archbishop manifests too plainly the cause of his anger. Here he shows that he is in his old days the same politician that he has ever been—that he thinks more of what the world will say, that world whose admiration he has ever tried to attract, than he does of what his temperance and people see and feel and think and [illegible]

The Archbishop asserts in contradiction of the [illegible] among the grown-up and well-informed Catholics there is hardly any such thing as intemperance. This I hope and believe to be true. If there be any such, of drunkards from the Church, his priests know it well. But, at the same time, I am sorry on the authority of his best and most respectable priests, that of this the Archbishop knows little or nothing—that he has seldom, if ever, called them together or confer[illegible] to ask their opinion or advice on this or any other subject. Or, if he did, it was to let them retire under the mortification of knowing that their opinion was of no possible consequence, and with the conviction that their advice would be utterly disregarded. In fact, I have been informed that in the extensive diocese of the arch diocese they have not, even so much to say as Brigham Young. That the Archbishop for them at least, is to move [illegible] mysteriously, without attracting notice, through the diocese, to take surreptitiously over the billows of the weather beaters, [illegible]

[illegible] of the rapid increase of population, the importations and [illegible] at our home and foreign commerce, the constant development of the material wealth of the State, the extent of our manufacturing, mechanical and agricultural industry, the fact that the State is flooded by a depreciated currency, introduced by private bankers and brokers, might justify, under the restrictions and limitations indicated, a judicious increase of banking capital within our Commonwealth. This, whilst it would aid the operations of trade, and supply the real business wants of the people, would, at the same time, remedy, to some extent, the evils of a depreciated foreign and illegal currency."

"There are in the State 1,300 School districts, 10,000 directors, 1,800 teachers, and over 500,000 scholars. The Governor declares that a sufficient number of competent and well-trained teachers is the great want of the system. In its structure and organization it is as perfect, if not more so, than any of the systems of sister States. The "Blind" and the "Deaf and Dumb Asylums" at Philadelphia, and "the Pennsylvania Training School for Idiotic and feeble-minded children," are declared to be institutions that appeal to the best feelings of the heart, and ask sympathy and aid. The establishment of an Agricultural Bureau is warmly recommended. "Omnibus" legislation is rebuked. A revision of the Militia law is deemed necessary.

Of the abuses of the elective franchise, the Message says:

"Illegal voting, whether founded on forgery or perjury, or both, on false assessments, or false and forged certificates of naturalization, is an evil that deserves the severest condemnation. It prevents an honest expression of the popular will, corrupts the sources of legitimate power and influence, and strikes a fatal blow at the cherished rights of freemen. These evils are alleged to exist in our large cities; the rural districts of the State are comparatively free from such corrupting abuses. A remedy, extensive with the evil, should be provided. Every defence should be thrown around the ballot-box, and whilst the rights of legal voters should be secured and protected, fraud in every form should be prevented and punished. Whether a judicious registry law, or some other measure of reform, adequate to the necessities of the case, should be adopted, is referred to the wisdom of the Legislature.

As appropriate to this subject, the reform of the naturalization laws—the prevention, by the National Government, of the importation of foreign criminals and paupers, and a more careful, rigid, and personal examination, by our Courts, of all persons coming before them as applicants for admission to the rights of citizenship, to some extent, corrects existing abuses, and relieves the ballot-box from the pressure of corrupting and dangerous influences."

Federal relations are then passed under review. The freedom of Kansas is insisted upon, and the idea of a revival of the Slave-Trade is indignantly scouted:

"In this connection, and as consequent upon the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, reference to a proposition made by some of the leading Southern journals, and more recently sanctioned by high official authority in a sister State, to reopen the African Slave-Trade, will not be deemed improper. That such a traffic, declared to be piracy, and execrated by the civilized world—so crowded with horrors in every stage of its pursuit—so revolting to every sentiment of humanity—so very impious of pure and noble feeling, should be advocated or approved, in this nineteenth century, with apparent sincerity, and urged as a measure of political economy, and of justice and equality to the Southern States of the Union, are facts that find their only explanation and apology in a wild enthusiasm, or a still wilder fanaticism that overwhelms alike the reason and the conscience.

The wisdom and humanity of a proposition so startling and monstrous, must seek their parallel and illustration in the dungeons of the Inquisition, or in the hold of the slave-ship, amid the horrors of the "middle passage." Equally repulsive to the intelligent and virtuous sentiment of the South as well as the North, it should receive the indignant rebuke of every lover of his country—of every friend of justice and humanity. The history of the world and of crime does not reveal a traffic more inhuman—an atrocity more horrible. Against a proposition so abhorrent, and against the principles it involves, as the representatives of a free people, and in their name, you should enter their unanimous and emphatic protest."

FINANCIAL REVIEW OF 1856.

Annual Circular of Messrs. DeCoppet & Co.

[Translation.]

As usual at this period, we present our correspondents with a review of the past year.

The eminently progressive state of the country, the rapid increase of population, the extension of settled and cultivated territory, and the important expansion of agricultural, mineral and industrial resources, must ever be a subject of great interest to European capitalists, and attract their attention, notwithstanding the recent increase of their own enterprises.

As having a direct influence on business, the pacific result of the elections, that have recently determined the choice of the President of the United States, for four years, offers a subject for congratulation. The dangerous questions broached at this election and the violent discussions to which they gave rise in the public press, were of a nature to excite serious fears in the mind of foreigners with regard to the issue. The calm and loyal manner in which the minority has submitted to the majority, affords a new proof of the elasticity of the federative form of our Government and is a fact calculated to dispel the exaggerated fears entertained by many persons for the future.

The great industrial enterprises which create the actual wealth of the country, its railroads, shipping, manufactures of various kinds, founderies, mines of various metals, the production of gold, and especially the productions of the soil, such as cotton, cereals, tobacco, &c., present altogether a striking development.

Among the manufactures whose more recent development is worthy of notice, are the iron founderies which the mineral resources of the country and its growing necessities seem particularly to favor. Our railroad iron, for instance, which, but a few years ago, was almost exclusively imported, is now, in considerable portion, produced at home; and when the immense extension of our railroad system over the whole surface of the United States is considered, an idea may be formed of the field opened to the development of this branch of industry. It may also be mentioned that locomotives and cars of all sorts used on our railroads are altogether made in our own workshops.

Exempt from the monetary embarrassments that marked preceding years, the commerce of the country has progressed and has been generally prosperous. An increase in the means of transportation to the seaboard, has stimulated the productions of the soil, and has permitted the Western and Southern States, which are essentially agricultural, to consume more of the products of both foreign and domestic manufactories. The liquidation of this increased consumption has been facilitated by a continued demand in Europe for our agricultural produce at remunerative prices.

As a natural consequence of this marked movement, our shipping has found constant and remunerative employment. According to the most exact information which we can obtain, the amount of freights collected abroad for transportation service by American vessels is estimated at from seventeen to nineteen millions of dollars for the year ending 30th June last, against thirteen to fourteen millions in 1855.

The healthy condition of the commerce of the country is demonstrated by the excess of the exportations over the importations of this year.

The considerably increased importations of European fabrics, during the last six months of the fiscal year, had awakened fears that the balance of trade for the year would be unfavorably affected by it, and that a large export of specie would be required to cover the deficit. The causes, however, already mentioned have led to an entirely different result: the Importations for the year having been $314,639,941, and the Exportations including specie $326,964,918, leaving a balance of $12,324,976 in favor of the commerce of the United States. The balance of the preceding year was $15,573,666, likewise in favor of the country. The figures of exportation of 1855 (fiscal year) included $58,957,418 of specie, against $44,148,279 in 1856; this difference will be apparently more than covered by an excess of exportation of specie during the last six months of 1856 (current year.)

It is necessary, as having a direct bearing upon the balance of trade, to make some mention, on the one hand, of the freight collected abroad, and estimated as above, at from seventeen to nineteen millions of dollars, of the specie brought into the country by emigrants, no official record of which can be kept; and on the other, of the remittances of interest on the American stocks held in Europe. It is difficult to ascertain accurately the amount of the latter; a great part of these securities being payable to bearer, they consequently cannot be traced. The Secretary of the Treasury, nevertheless, recently furnished, in his report, the following data: He estimates the debt of the Federal Government, of the 31 States of the Union, of 113 Cities, of 357 Counties, and the capital of 285 banks, of 75 insurance companies, of 160 railroad companies, of 16 canal companies, and of 15 miscellaneous corporations, at $1,467,516,894, $303,922,937 of which he states to be owned abroad. This figure, which would appear low after the estimates made by former authorities, is sufficient, nevertheless, to prove that the interest to be remitted to Europe cannot exceed, and does not even reach, the amount of freight to be collected abroad, and the specie imported by immigrants. Within the two last years, the Treasury has dispersed, for the redemption of the Federal debt, $22,606,248, and for the Mexican indemnity, $10,000,000. It is estimated that about two-thirds of the former sum, and almost all the latter, has been remitted to foreign parts. This fact, in view of the confidence in foreign of European demand for American stocks in general, leads naturally to the conclusion that the amount held in Europe has not probably increased during this lapse of time.

Notwithstanding this rapid increase of wealth in the country, the new accession of capital are more than absorbed by the demand for the necessary means to carry on the undertakings called for by the necessities of the [illegible] employment of capital may be [illegible] for the extension of our numerous enterprises. This [illegible] to the determination of our whole [illegible] rise that has taken place in the rates of interest, has evidently operated in a decided manner upon this question. According to the principles of numerous political economists, it was argued that the successive discovery of the mines in California and Australia, in producing a considerable accession to the quantities of gold in circulation, would have the effect of gradually reducing the rates of interest. The result thus far has given a flagrant contradiction to these predictions. On the one hand the rush of population attracted by the allurement of the precious metals in the new regions, has formed there in a few years new communities and entire nations, the wants and new undertakings of which demand considerable capital, requiring a proportionate representative in circulating medium. On the other hand, this same accumulation of gold, both in Europe and in the United States, would appear to have largely stimulated all kinds of industrial enterprises, both by the governments and by individuals. The consequence has been a rapid and unexpected absorption of the newly-added capital, causing at the present moment an active demand for money, to which none of the mercantile communities throughout the world have remained strangers. It has naturally resulted in a general advance in the rates of interest, affecting as a consequence the prices of public stocks as well in the United States as in Europe. [illegible]

As indicating a prudent and well-based banking system, we herewith submit, in a tabular form, some data derived from official sources. This table shows the capital of all the banks in the United States in 1855 and 1856, and compares their circulation, discounts, deposits, specie, &c. The increase of capital, and the general movement, have been very moderate, indicating an expansion barely proportioned to the wants of commerce and manufactures, with the growth of which they have hardly kept pace. The experience of preceding years has not been without fruit, and the dangerous error committed in the past of borrowing the credit of banks to aid in the construction of railroads has been generally avoided.

As regards more especially the City of New-York, the communications between this port and Europe, which are now almost daily, has caused the influence of the markets of London and Paris to be sensibly felt here, hence their movements are closely watched. The large shipments of produce which are made from this port, and the negotiations effected against them, have had the effect of increasing the banking capital of the City banks, as is shown by the visible increase in the figures of deposits. This circumstance, however, has not been sufficient to counterbalance the effect produced by the irregularity of the European money markets. Undergoing the conse*quences of a distant and expensive war, and obliged* to make up the deficit in the harvests, the Bank of England, and, especially, the Bank of France, have seen their metallic reserves fall to an unusually reduced figure, and have been obliged to contract their discounts, and resort to extraordinary measures, in order to force the current of specie towards their own vaults. We have, consequently, felt here the effects of the scarcity of money thus caused in these markets.

The demand for remittances of balances due, and even in anticipation, rendered more pressing from Europe by the high rates of interest everywhere ruling there, the advantages offered in Paris for the shipment thither of specie, have occasioned a large export of the precious metals during the last six months, and produced, although in a less degree than last year, a very active demand for money and high rates of interest in our City. Considering these facts, and bearing in mind that, according to present appearances, there will be an excess of shipment of cereals this year, over the last fiscal year, (30th June,) and that moreover the export of Cotton has been backward, presenting, to this moment, a falling off of 242,000 bales, compared with last year, which deficit will probably be made up in value, if not in quantity, and we arrive at the conclusion that, if, up to the present time, our Gold receipts from California have sufficed to supply the foreign demand in liquidation of the balance of commerce, there is no cause for apprehension on this head for the next season, arising from a probable increased amount of importation.

The above remarks, sustained by the various statistical tables which follow, are of a nature to leave no fear as to the actual soundness of our commerce.

The importance of the railway interest in the United States induces us to enter into some details concerning it. Less impeded by financial difficulties than it has been during the preceding years, the construction of railways has been pursued with great vigor, and there has been added during the year 5,401 miles to the number of miles already constructed at the commencement of 1856. The progress made in the extension of railways has been considerable, not only in the North and West of the Union, but equally in the South. This net-work thus binds and draws together the remote parts of the United States, and renders them mutually dependent one upon the other for the development and extension of their agriculture, commerce and manufacture.

It is not out of place to remark here that the expenditures have not been conducted solely with a view to the extension of the lines. A large number of those opened to traffic were but imperfectly finished and equipped. These imperfections are being gradually remedied, partly explaining the increased cost which has resulted therefrom.

However active the construction of railroads has been up to the present time, a new impetus has been given to it. The success in the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad, partly based upon a land grant, is well known. The Government yielding to numerous petitions has recently made similar grants with great liberality to other Corporations. These land grants are calculated greatly to lessen the difficulties which, in many cases, impede the extension of many useful roads, and they are even considered, if wisely managed, to be sufficient in themselves to defray the cost of the enterprises. The following Companies have been the principal grantees: In Florida, the Florida Railroad traversing the northern part of the State from Ferdinanda to Cedar Keys; in Missouri, the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad; in Iowa, the Burlington and Missouri, the Iowa Central, the Mississippi and Missouri, and the Dubuque and Pacific Railroads. These four last lines are to extend from the Mississippi to the Missouri River. They form in some manner the continuation of the Peoria and Oquawka Railroad at Burlington; of the Chicago and Rock Island at Davenport, and the Galena and Chicago Railroad at Fulton, and of the Illinois Central Railroad at Dubuque. In Wisconsin, the Lacrosse and Milwaukie, and the Chicago, St. Paul and Fond du Lac Railroads, have had their share of these grants. The first of these lines is destined to connect the city of Milwaukie with Lacrosse, on the Mississippi, and the western extremity of Lake Superior, the second proceeds from Fond du Lac towards the northeastern part of the State.

The greater part of these companies are organized and have commenced operations, which promise to be pursued with activity.

Among the companies of the Middle and Western States, whose roads have been completed and opened to traffic on their whole length, during the year, we mention the following as being the most important: the Illinois Central, the Galena and Chicago, the Terre Haute and Alton, the Illinois Great Western, and the Wabash Valley and Western Railroad, (formerly called the Lake Erie, Wabash and St. Louis.)

The Cleveland and Pittsburg and Milwaukee and Mississippi Railroads are on the eve of being completed.

N. B.—We have borrowed this year as well as last, the figures of the progressive extension of railroads, since their origin, from Disturnell's Railroad Guide.

| | Miles. | | Miles. | | Miles. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| In 1836..... | 1,612 | In 1851..... | 11,631 | In 1854..... | 16,764 |

The cost, per mile, of railroads necessarily varies greatly, according to localities, topographical difficulties, and the period in which they were constructed. In the Middle and Eastern States, the more expensive lines provided with double tracks and a large rolling stock, have cost from $60,000 to $70,000 a mile. The Reading Railroad, which has three tracks upon almost its entire length, and whose rolling material is by far the largest in proportion to its length, costs about $190,000 a mile. In the West and South, where the natural impediments are not so great, and the material more economical, the total cost has not exceeded, in many cases, $25,000 a mile. It is estimated that on an average the railroads and their equipments in the United States have cost $35,700 a mile. The 24,476 miles completed at the end of 1856, represents thus a total cost of $873,198,900.

As showing the cost per mile, the subjoined data must necessarily be imperfect, since amongst other reasons, several of the great lines such as the New-York Central, Erie, Pennsylvania Central, Baltimore and Ohio, Michigan Central, Michigan Southern and others, have subscribed to the stock, or taken the bonds of other Companies whose trade appeared likely to augment their traffic, thus swelling the apparent cost of their own road.

In the following table we have arranged in different columns the length in operation of the Railroads, the capital stock paid in, the debt, the total cost, and in the two last columns the gross receipts for the years ending Nov. 30, 1855 and 1856. We have included in this table only the roads the shares of which are dealt in at our Stock Exchange.

In the midst of this real prosperity, as appears from the aggregate receipts, we will allude to the failure of some Companies, and to the default in the payment of interest on their bonds, in which numbers of European capitalists are interested. Although in certain cases, a want of honest administration may have caused these irregularities, the cause in general must be attributed to the precipitancy with which the enterprises have been undertaken, the nature and cost of which had not been correctly estimated, and in which, owing to want of experience, grave errors have been committed. The numerous roads since then constructed have afforded to competent engineers opportunities of acquiring much experience in the building of Railroads; the details of administration have likewise become better understood, and tend to prevent the repetition of past errors.

Complaints are sometimes made, but without cause, that in case of the non-payment of interest on bonds, even when secured by mortgage, the remedy appears slow and unsatisfactory. It is true that, in many cases, on account of particular and exceptional circumstances, it has been thought more to the advantage of the creditors to have recourse to compromise, rather than to a peremptory foreclosure. It is proper, however, to remark that when, in consequence of the non-payment of interest, the companies have been sued to ob-

[illegible]

With respect to railroad issues lately made, the [illegible] have committed to which the majority of shareholders [illegible] which will conduce to additional security for the creditors, and to which the majority of shareholders [illegible] negotiations have obliged companies to acquiesce. Thus a large portion of bonds, issued of late, are guaranteed by first mortgage of only six thousand per mile, including the rolling material. A sinking fund [illegible] sufficient to absorb the whole issue at maturity. This system has a double advantage [illegible] the financial condition at the time of maturity [illegible]—The necessity of purchasing for the sinking fund creates a perpetual demand for these securities, which results in a gradual absorption, and must act favorably upon their market value.

On the Stock Exchange we remark that at the period of the year has money been sufficiently abundant to allow the rates of discount on first class paper established by the banks, namely, 6 to 7 per cent.

For the first fortnight in January, things continued the same as they were at the end of 1855; the current rates for negotiable paper varying from 10 to 12 per cent, and 12 to 15 per cent. being paid at the Stock Exchange for borrowing stocks. The money market then grew easier till towards the middle of July when, for a short time, loans on call were done at from 5 to 6 per cent, and paper from 7 to 8 per cent. Since then up to the present time there has been a tendency towards higher rates. In the latter part of December the rates for paper rose to 8 per cent, and differences equal to 12 to 15 per cent. have been paid at the Stock Exchange for time purchases.

The rise and fall on stock during the year do not seem to have followed the rates of interest in their fluctuations. The state of our market was influenced more by the effects produced in the London and Paris markets by the Eastern war, and the questions depending thereon. Nevertheless when the conclusion of peace became a fixed fact, our Stock Market fell, while money was not at all scarce, and without any apparent cause, prices were lowest in May; they then rose, and in July touched, with few exceptions, their culminating point of the season.

It is well, however, to observe that the prices of Railroad Shares have been influenced more by the actual prosperity of each Company individually, than by the state of the money market.

We have already alluded to Railroad Bonds; as to those of States, Cities and Counties, the regularity with which their interest has been paid, renders any particular mention unnecessary. The favorable opinion generally formed of their safety has thereby been confirmed. The low price at which many of these Bonds are quoted should not be taken as any indication of their intrinsic value, or of their being less secure than heretofore, it only proves that these securities have been issued and thrown upon the market more rapidly than the unemployed capital could absorb them.

It is not improbable that these low prices, and the difficulty of realising, in defeating the proposed object of raising money without too great sacrifices, may tend considerably to slacken, at least for a time, the emission of these bonds. Whatever influence these circumstances may have upon the greater or lesser rapidity of the issues, it cannot be questioned, that the extension of the railroad system, in rapidly creating or developing new resources in the country, has increased the means of providing for the interest on and reimbursement of debts. The following statistical data supports this opinion: Thus we find that in 1850, before the development of the railroads to a productive point, the amount of taxable property in Ohio was $489,876,246, while in 1855 it rose to $650,877,954. In Iowa the population in 1850 was 192,214, in 1854, 326,014, and in 1856, 582,625; and the amount of taxable property in 1851 was $29,444,550, in 1854, $72,827,804, and in 1856, $164,104,415. Wisconsin in 1850 contained a population of 305,191, which in 1856 was estimated at about 700,000. The city of Milwaukie in 1850 numbered 23,401 souls, and 1856 between 40,000 and 45,000. The population of Illinois in 1851, before the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad, was 878,900; in 1855 about 1,500,000; and the city of Chicago in the same time increased from 31,000 to 110,000 souls, having become the most important grain port in the world. It shipped in 1855, 15,740,000 bushels of grain, against 4,750,000 in 1851. We mention these cases as being the most remarkable, and as giving an idea of the rapid increase of population and property which to a degree has taken place, more or less, over the whole country.

From the foregoing facts we conclude that there is no want of the elements of prosperity, and consequently of safety; nevertheless, in searching for investment securities, the choice necessarily requires prudence and knowledge. During the past year the number of enterprises that have started up in Europe, in offering a more attractive or profitable employment for money, have captivated the attention of capitalists. When, through change of circumstances, they may again desire to turn their attention towards the United States, they will doubtless find there, among the numerous classes of securities, various and profitable investments, offering at the same time desirable guarantees of safety. ## The Newspaper Press.

The following just and sensible remarks concerning the duties and responsibilities of the Newspaper Press, are from an Address delivered before the South Carolina Press Association, at Columbia, on the 9th inst., by W. B. Johnston, Esq.:

"There are other duties devolving upon the conductors of the press which more immediately relate to the welfare, virtue and happiness of the community. Editors, by all means, should jealously watch over their columns, lest the slightest taint or immorality, or impurity, should be found there. The newspaper, once a luxury, has become a necessity in every family, and no matter how attractive may be the garb in which wrong teachings are clothed, they should be rigidly excluded from its pages. Flash novelettes, highly colored descriptions of fashionable vices, thrilling accounts of murders, robberies, and other felonies, constant publication of the follies and failings of human nature, all tend to the demoralization of the taste, especially of the young reader. If we desire to see our children grow up virtuous, the purity of our magazine and newspaper literature must be assiduously watched over and cultivated. And this must be done for the reason that it counts its thousands of readers among the young, while works of a higher standard of literature are totally neglected by them. In this respect, then, the conductors of the press have a responsibility resting upon them which cannot be measured.

It is reasonable to suppose that in this day of universal reading the peace and happiness of very many must be affected and acted upon by what may be called their daily mental food. It is much easier to pull down than build up, and all history teaches us that among the peoples who have passed away, the *seed of decay first germinated in the corruption of licentiousness, and that the first steps towards the de*struction and downfall of ruined nations were those taken from the paths of religion and morality. Then, as a brotherhood of teachers, whose influence penetrates into the domestic circle of every fireside in the land; as patrons, who desire to transmit to those who come after us our heritage of liberty; as men, as fathers, and as brothers, we cannot be held justifiable in the sight of God or man if we fail to discharge our duty in this respect with the utmost fidelity.

A very offensive feature of the journalism of the day is the system of universal and indiscriminate "puffing" of every person and thing for which some slight equivalent may have been given. The public are fast losing confidence in editors' notices of exhibitions, books, quack medicines, charlatans and humbugs; and, until the press shakes off the habit, and abandons the idea that every thing, good, bad or indifferent, has to be commended, for a notice of which they have been slightly complimented, the readers of journals will think the space devoted to such notices very poorly occupied, and will very properly give up paying any attention to them.

Another unfortunate characteristic of modern political journalism is a growing tendency to personalities, invective and abuse of those who differ from us. This is really injurious, not, perhaps, so much to the public as to journalists themselves. Our own experience, and that of others we have been acquainted with, teach us that, after cool reflection, departures from the true mission of journalism bring nothing but regret to the party who permits himself so to deviate. In saying this, however, I must not be understood as favoring any restriction on the just and beneficial criticism—the free expression of opinion, whether of praise or censure, on the public acts of public men. If eternal vigilance be the price of liberty, it is not only within the legitimate province of the press, but it is one of its highest and most sacred duties, to arrest the triumphant demagogue in his career—to expose his hollow-heartedness and selfishness—and to point out the danger to public liberty by the elevation of such an one to any office of trust within the gift of the people. From this duty, fortunately for us connected with the press of this State, we are comparatively exempt. There appears to be a noble guiding and ruling principle in the nature and temperament of the men whom the people of Carolina honor with their confidence, that prevents them from becoming amenable to the strictures of a free but conservative press. The public records of the State and of the country will bear me out in this eulogium on the general rectitude and fidelity of the public officers and statesmen of South Carolina.

But if a man's public acts, or the manner in which he discharges the duties he assumes, be legitimate subjects of editorial supervision, we must never forget that his private character and reputation are exclusively his own. They cannot be made the theme of newspaper gossip, or be dragged forth to serve political purposes, without the prostitution of that great instrumentality placed under our control. The publication that makes its columns the medium through which the prejudices, spleen, or resentful feelings of its conductor may be gratified, must soon become a wholesale slanderer. Such a print should be stricken from the roll of journalism as a public enemy of society, by its compeers or contemporaries.

It is true that editors are men of the passions and feelings as others around them, but those of us who have had any experience, know that one of the highest and most essential qualifications for the position is the ability to control them when occasion, honor or virtue demands it. The man who cannot abandon a cherished resentment in this respect, is always liable to desecrate one of the highest and noblest vocations

Slave Insurrection in Alabama.

The Livingston (Sumter County, Ala.) Messenger, of the 24th ult., has the following:

"On Saturday night last, our patrol force in this place discovered, from the confessions of a negro girl, that the negroes here were in the act of organizing an insurrection against the whites during the Christmas holidays. This led to further discovery, and the arrest of some twenty five or thirty negroes. Some of these negroes were examined by a Committee appointed for that purpose, by a public meeting held on Sunday, and it appeared from their confessions that negroes from [illegible] had began to set on foot a plan for a general outbreak about Christmas. The Committee [illegible] tion to examine each of these negroes, and [illegible] of them concurred in their statements [illegible] it was to be put in execution, and the [illegible] to be used.

Two of the negroes stated that a force of [illegible] hundred negroes was expected to meet [illegible] on Christmas night, and the same were to [illegible] and the whites were to be killed. Several [illegible] meeting were appointed, and the [illegible] given by the blast of a bugle. One of the negroes disclosed the fact that a white man of [illegible] had promised to furnish them with [illegible] nition. Some of the statements of the slaves [illegible] ted, tended to show that the slaves in other parts of the county, had mediated an uprising about the same time. Early on Sunday morning messengers were dispatched to all parts of the county to give the alarm.

On Monday last many people from the country assembled here; and at a called meeting, upon the vote being taken, it was agreed that the law should take its course. The ringleaders of the insurrection and some others, were considered guilty, and were detained in prison. Eight or ten pistols were found in the houses of several of the negroes [illegible] but only two or three were in order. A bag of bullets concealed was found upon the person of one of them, who denied to the last bitter end that he was implicated in the affair. Though diligent search was made, no other weapons were discovered.

Much praise is due the patrol force in this place for their untiring perseverance and energy in [illegible] out this whole affair. By their timely efforts the insurrection has been crushed in its bud, and the lives and property of our citizens saved. There is now a large patrol force in active service throughout the county, and every man is on his guard. So great is the vigilance that will be used, further disturbance is said to be impossible. Though there has been a good deal of excitement in this place, there has been no alarm on the part of the white population.

Irish Stoicism.—An Irishman at work for Mr. Mell., in the village of Rochester, some time since, requested his employer to let him know when the arrival of the ship New-York was expected, for he was to come passenger in the "cold cabin and the children." Accordingly, when news came of the wreck off Sconce, Mr. Mell, called up Pat and informed him of the wreck and the fearful state of things reported in the papers, and giving his money, advised him not to come to start to the relief of his family, which was met with an abundance of thanks. But what think you must have been the astonishment of Mr. Mell, when on the following morning he found the laborious husband and father calmly at work on the wood-pile. "Pat," exclaimed he, "what, are you here? I thought you were half way to New-York before this." "And where, your honor, would Pat be? Pat knows it all ever, an' if the dead women is drowned, what good should I go; an' if she be not drowned, she shure an' won't she come right with the ship?"—Rochester Eagle.

Massachusetts Antislavery.—The Anti-Slave States Convention held an adjourned meeting [illegible] forenoon, at Mercantile Hall, Summer street. [illegible] Morris G. Crane, the President, in the Chair. The [illegible] business that was adjourned was the consideration of [illegible] portion. The Committee appointed to draft a new constitution, then submitted their report, which, after considerable debate, was finally adopted. We learn, that the new constitution is based upon the "Springfield platform" of the Republicans, and is a much simpler instrument than the old one. It provides for open Council meetings in future, except in cases where subjects of importance shall call for and demand a secret session. The meeting also very thinly attended.—Boston Atlas, 8th.

The Pardoning Power.

The subject more imperatively demands Legislative attention than the exercise of the Pardoning power. That such a prerogative should be vested somewhere, is a matter of necessity—and there is no better or safer tribunal for its exercise than the Governor. Nor is it possible to restrict its exercise, or prescribe limitations or conditions for it, without doing thereby more harm than good. But something can and should be done, to render applications for pardon less common and less embarrassing. An application for pardon is now as much a matter of course as the conviction of a criminal. Hardly a convict has somebody, if none but his old [illegible], who is interested in securing his release. Mostly all have wives, or parents, or kindred—for convicts are men, and have the common relationship, the same hold on kindred affection as other men—and all will find somebody unwilling to surrender them to the disgrace of death, or of long imprisonment, without a final appeal to the authority which has power to set them free.

The Governor can, of course, know nothing of the merits of his case personal knowledge, of the merits of such applications. He can only read testimony—so much of it as can be put on paper—but instead of any scrutiny of the evidence, any hearing of the arguments of counsel, or the charge of the presiding Judge, he has only the impassioned, tearful appeals of the prisoner's wife, or the gray-haired and decrepit father, but still affectionate and clinging mother. The chances, in such a case, are two to one that justice will not be done.

Another abuse has been gradually growing up in connection with criminal trials. The prosecuting Attorney feels that he is engaged in a disagreeable and repulsive office. The presiding Judge, while true to duty, feels the relenting of pity common to all men when called on to inflict pain and misery. And the Jury, though convinced of the criminal's guilt, share the common reluctance to make others wretched. So they all compromise the matter with their consciences, by doing their duty, and then sign a joint application for the convict's pardon. It would be going too far to say that this has become a common practice;—but it occurs not infrequently, and leads to serious evil results. Some of the convicts pardoned by Governor CLARK returned immediately to their haunts and practices of crime;—and in excuse for his action the fact was stated, that their applications for pardon were signed by most of the officers who had been instrumental in procuring their conviction. In this way responsibility is shifted from one to another. The Attorney, Judge and Jury sign because it looks unfeeling to refuse, and the responsibility, after all, rests with the Governor. And the Governor pardons because, whether right or wrong, he can find no ground for the recommendations of those who ought to know so much more of the matter than he can.

What makes applications for pardon necessary in the great majority of those cases in which they are so, is—not any doubt as to the guilt of the criminal, but a conviction that the penalty inflicted is too great for the crime which he has committed. Very few cases of unjust conviction ever occur. Where one innocent person is punished, ten guilty ones escape. But crimes are defined by law, and to each crime a specific penalty is also affixed by law. If the technical crime is made out, the specific penalty must be inflicted. But the technical definitions of crime do not, and cannot, in every case determine its moral character. For example, we have in mind a case where a sailor, returning from a cruise, in a drunken, maniac frolic stole a box of cigars from a dwelling house; it was shown that a window-shutter was pushed open, or something of that kind, and the offence was thus technically proved to be burglary in the first degree. For this offence the statute is explicit in saying that the penalty shall be confinement in the State prison for "not less than ten years." Yet who does not feel that this is a most inadequate and unjust punishment for such a crime? This is only one instance among the many which are of frequent occurrence, where penalties are inflicted by law which every one feels to be far greater than the offence deserves. And so long as they are allowed to exist, the Governor must continue to be overwhelmed with applications for pardon, which he can neither grant nor refuse without danger of doing the greatest injustice on one side or the other.

The remedy lies in giving greater latitude and discretion to our criminal courts, in the infliction of punishment. The presiding Judge is better qualified to decide what penalty each particular offence deserves, than the law can possibly be. For he has all its incidents presented before him. He knows the facts, the inducements, the motives, the aggravating or extenuating circumstances, which belong to each individual case. And it is upon the basis of these considerations that punishment should be awarded. To coldly define crimes and punishments, and then blindly adhering to each,—is an arbitrary, and most unjust method of adjudging them. [illegible] the peculiar characteristics,—[illegible] the culprit, and deaden [illegible] the sympathy and desire [illegible] to aid in the execution of the law, and enlist the action of some of the many [illegible] sensitive and conscientious men who shrink from the ordeal of a criminal trial, and thus [illegible] the state, [illegible] law, while they will relieve the Governor from a difficult and unpleasant duty, and society from the evils of its improper discharge.

Southern Equality—Symptoms of a New Political Movement.

The Richmond Enquirer, in common with other Southern papers, concedes the comparative barrenness, so far as the peculiar interests of the slave-power are directly concerned, of the victory achieved in the election of Mr. BUCHANAN. It has unquestionably established practicably—and for some time to come, at all events—the doctrine that Congress shall not prohibit Slavery in any of the Territories: but it has done it only by committing to the people of those Territories entire control over the subject. This may be, and doubtless is, in theory, a gain for Slavery; but so far as Kansas, which is the turning point of the contest for extending Slavery, is concerned, it is not likely to yield the Slave States any practical advantage.

The Enquirer virtually concedes that Kansas is to be a Free State, and will present herself for admission into the Union as such. This application it will be very difficult for the South to resist. Indeed upon the basis of the Nebraska bill and the Cincinnati Platform, it cannot be directly resisted at all. The Enquirer therefore, in the following paragraph from one of its editorials, foreshadows a new position to which it will endeavor to rally the South:

"In the Kansas-Nebraska act it was solemnly agreed that hereafter Government would not exclude Slavery from any territory, but would leave it to the people of every annexed sovereignty to determine their institutions for themselves. This is a wise and wholesome principle, but its recognition in the policy of Government comes too late for the relief of the South. We did not only want justice for the future, but we were entitled to indemnity for past spoliation. The North has been enriched at our expense. Our growth has been dwarfed to aggrandize the political power of Anti-Slavery. The South has been held back in the race, until it is almost hopeless to think of again getting abreast of the North. In reason and in conscience we might claim compensation for our losses, and demand to be put upon an equality with the free States. But the North is deaf to the voice both of reason and of conscience, and we need make no such appeal to its justice or its magnanimity.

But, we may insist that henceforth the North and the South shall progress part passu in the march of power; that the preponderance of the one shall not increase over the inferiority of the other; and that the Slave States shall retain in their own hands the means of repelling an assault upon their institutions. In the Senate the two sections stand upon equal ground. If this equality is perpetuated the South may find a defence against aggression in the Confederacy. If the North is allowed to attain an ascendancy in the Senate, an constitutional check will restrain its encroachments, and the South will be driven to seek security out of the Union.

For many years it was the policy of Government to balance the accession of a Free State by the simultaneous admission of a Slave State into the Union. Why may not Government resort to this equitable arrangement? There is an abundance of territory south of the dividing line to allow of an indefinite multiplication of Slave States. The only difficulty is in the obstinate injustice of Abolitionism; but the South encounters that obstacle in all its movements. Henceforth, we repeat, let the free expansion of its institutions be the ultimatum of the South."

The plain English of this is, that Kansas must not be admitted as a Free State, unless a Slave State can be admitted at the same time. This, it will be seen, is a complete abandonment, or rather repudiation, of the whole principle of Popular Sovereignty.

We have our doubts whether the Democracy of the South can be rallied to this new standard at present. But we are curious to see how it will be received by the Democratic Party of the Free States. It cannot be endorsed without a flagrant departure from what is now recognized as the settled party platform,—and that platform was itself a concession to the South, wrung from the North only by the most imperious necessity. Whether the Northern wing of the Democratic Party is prepared to take a new stride in the same direction, we are inclined to doubt.

An article which we copy in another column from the Albany Atlas and Argus, is not without significance in this connection. That paper probably represents more nearly than any other, for the present at least, the sentiment and spirit of the Northern Democracy. It protests very earnestly against the project suggested in some quarters, that the official organ at Washington should have two editors, one from each section of the Union. And it bases this protest upon a very peremptory declaration that there is no difference of sentiment between the Democrats of the North and those of the South,—but that they occupy common ground and "stand upon a common platform."

We shall know more about this matter in the course of time.

The New British Minister.

We have an official intimation from Washington of what was some time since unofficially announced,—the appointment of a new British resident at the capital in the person of Hon. CHARLES PELHAM VILLIERS. The announcement is gratifying for several reasons, the chief of which are that the entente cordiale between the two nations is thus completely reëstablished; and that the envoy dispatched hither, in political position and talent, is an infinite improvement upon preceding representatives of Her Britannic Majesty in this country.

Mr. VILLIERS is a younger brother of the Earl of CLARENDON, the British Foreign Secretary. They are sons of Hon. GEORGE VILLIERS; and the new minister is now in his fifty-fifth year. He graduated M. A. at Cambridge in 1827, and the same year was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn. At that period all those measures which led the way to the Reform bill, and to the beneficent legislation succeeding it, were in the course of violent discussion, Catholic emancipation and the Test acts, especially exciting the public mind, and enlisting partisans actively for and against them. There were also the several movements for law reform and the amendment of the Poor Laws, at the head of which were BROUGHAM, RUSSELL, GREY, and in the background old JEREMY BENTHAM, the father of reform. Mr. VILLIERS had no hesitation as to which of these parties he should attach himself to. He became an ardent reformer; did yeoman's service as a pamphleteer; and as the new policy succeeded entered Parliament in 1835 for Wolverhampton, in Staffordshire, a borough he has continued to represent ever since. The Anti-Corn-Law League has had no more efficient agent. Until the triumph of that cause, the motion of the member for Wolverhampton for a repeal of duties upon breadstuffs was as certain to come during the early days of every session of Parliament, as the Queen's speech. He has also been untiring in his advocacy of the vote by ballot; and, in general, lent all his influence, which is great, to every liberal measure brought forward by Lord JOHN RUSSELL, and his school of doctrinaires. Mr. VILLIERS is always listened to in the House of Commons with profound deference. A highly intellectual style of delivery, occasionally heightened by eloquent animation, compose the personnel of the Parliamentary orator, and render him equally popular in society and in public. That he will become so in Washington there can be very little doubt. It may not diminish his attractions among metropolitan ladies to make it known that the very agreeable and distinguished stranger is a bachelor.

If anything can insure permanence to the present friendly relations between this Government and that of England, it will be the presence at our seat of Government of an envoy like Mr. VILLIERS, high-toned, honorable, accomplished, and not educated, as were his predecessors, in the tricky details of diplomacy. The Erskines, Packenhams, Bulwers and Cramptons, who have hitherto occupied the post, have all been the graduates of prolonged schooling in the several European Embassies.

The luxury of dealing with a strait-forward gentleman and statesman, instead of these professional diplomatists, will be appreciated at the Department of Sate.

NEWS FROM EUROPE.—The steamship North American, from Liverpool on the 24th ult., arrived at Portland yesterday. Advices are four days later. The most contradictory reports prevail respecting the anticipated meeting of the Congress of Paris. It is stated that Count WALEWSKI had officially notified Count BUOL that France did not agree with England, Austria and Turkey on the Isle of Serpents and Belgrade questions. The London Globe denies that there is any difficulty between England and France, but the denial is scarcely borne out by appearances. An indefinite postponement of the Conferences is regarded as a not improbable consequence of the present dilemma. The Neufchatel affair grows daily more threatening. Diplomatic relations have ceased between Prussia and Switzerland, and both Powers are preparing for war. It is believed that France and Russia will approve, while England and Austria will disapprove of an armed demonstration by Prussia. From England we learn that the invasion of Persia creates dissatisfaction among the people. The opinion gains ground that it will lead to another war between Great Britain and Russia. The American officers of the Arctic ship Resolute continued to receive the most marked attention from the British people. The only public entertainment they were able to attend was the one given by the citizens of Plymouth. On Christmas day they were to dine with Lady FRANKLIN, after which they would return home in the Retribution.

THE LEGISLATURE.—In the Senate yesterday, the Comptroller sent in a report stating that the amount of money paid the soldiers of 1812, was $150,420 98. A bill was introduced to amend the law relating to the insurance of property in this State by foreign companies. It compels the payment of two per cent. to the Fire Department Fund annually; the returns to be made on oath; requires security in bonds to the Fire Department, and provides penalties in case of neglect. A resolution was introduced awarding a gold medal to Lieut. HARTSTEIN. It was laid over.

In the Assembly, a great variety of petitions and bills were introduced. The resolutions in regard to President PIERCE'S Message were called up and tabled. A joint resolution was introduced and laid over, urging Congress to protect the citizens of the United States in the free navigation of the Missouri River, and alluding to the late outrages of the citizens of Missouri in Kansas. Another joint resolution, urging upon Congress the necessity of providing for the better protection of life on the coast, and for giving rewards to those by whom life is saved, was introduced and laid over. A resolution calling on the Attorney-General for information as to whether the present House has the constitutional power to redistrict the State, was called up and adopted after some debate. The Governor's Message was considered in Committee of the Whole, but no vote was taken upon it.

THE TROUSSEAU OF A SLAVE BRIDE.—A letter, in the Journal of Commerce, from a lady slave-owner in Georgia, gives an account of the recent marriage of one of her negroes. She says:

"The couple, last night, were both very young and handsome, and the groom, in a full suit of black, with a white cravat, looked as serene and unembarrassed as if he had been a gentleman. The bride's trousseau, furnished by her parents, who, like herself, are common field hands, would do credit to many a decent white mechanic. She has seven new dresses and a shawl, besides more necessary articles, and the trifles from the groom, one of which is invariably a bottle of cologne."

We imagine that they have rather vague notions down in Georgia about "decent mechanics." Doubtless there are many decent mechanics among us whose brides could not exhibit a trousseau of seven new dresses and a shawl; but then, the bride of a decent mechanic, or even of the poorest free laborer, when she becomes a mother has the privilege of owning her own child, which is a priceless pleasure the poor slave bride with her seven new dresses and a shawl will never know. The writer of the letter says, "during the Christmas Festival we give ourselves up to the comfort of the negroes," and the Journal heads the letter with "Condition of Slaves in Georgia." But the slaves themselves would probably tell a very different story as to their condition in Georgia. We have no right to question the veracity of the Georgia lady; but since Mr. ARNOWSMITH hoaxed the London Times with his story of the duels on the Georgia Central Railroad, we have not seen anything from that State which was sent from so long a bow as the story of a common field-hand bestowing upon his daughter a trousseau of seven new dresses and a shawl, besides necessary articles.

THE HUNTINGTON CASE.—We decline to publish any of the many communications that reach us in regard to the famous case of HUNTINGTON,—not because they are not well written and just in their comments, but because their publication could do no good. We expressed our own opinions in regard to the character of the line of defence adopted by his counsel, at the time when, if at all, we supposed its expression might do some good. The verdict of the Jury affords the best and strongest possible comment upon the theory of the defence, and there is no good end to be secured by indulging in any further discussion of the subject.

We believe that HUNTINGTON was justly convicted, and that—unless forgery has ceased to be a crime, there is not in Sing Sing a convict [illegible]

GIFTS FOR THE PEOPLE.—A mania for making gifts to public institutions is very prevalent at the present time among our wealthy citizens. It is a mania we shall be sorry to witness an abatement of, and we hope that, on the contrary, it may continue to increase with our increasing prosperity as a people. Several of the wealthy citizens of New-York and Brooklyn, we notice, have lately made donations to that admirable institution, the Dudley Observatory at Albany. We are glad to see the announcement of these donations, and hope that they may prove as reminders to some of our citizens whose purses are suffering from a plethora, that we have no Observatory in this City, or its immediate neighborhood, where one would be of great practical benefit to the public. An attempt was made a few years since to establish an Observatory in Brooklyn, by some of the prominent citizens over there, but we have not lately heard anything about the scheme. The present time, when there seems to be a mania for giving, is an opportune one for reviving the matter. Brooklyn is already well endowed with institutions of instruction, and an Observatory would be a special feather in her cap, which would cost but a comparatively small sum.

It is remarkable that our great public benefactors, such as the Astors and Coopers, are all men who have made their money by their own industry. Our hereditary millionaires have not shown much disposition to give to the public. It is only those who have risen from the people by their own unaided efforts who sympathise with the people.

WHERE IS THE POLICE?—Policemen are not ubiquitous, and therefore they do not share the happy faculty which was possessed by the gentleman alluded to by Mrs. Malaprop, who could be in two places at once. A policeman cannot be everywhere; but then he may reasonably be expected to be somewhere. From the boldness of our burglars it would seem that our policemen have a remarkable faculty of not being just where they are most needed. We know there are not half enough of them, but still we cannot help thinking that if they were sufficiently active we should not every morning hear of quite so many robberies as we do. CHARLES LAMB talks in one of his essays of the "sweet security of streets," but he had never lived in any of the thickly populated streets of this City, or he would have made use of very different adjectives to express his satisfaction with them. Our streets are as far from being secure as they are from being sweet. On one night in the early part of this week the house of a gentleman residing in the lower part of Fifth-avenue was entered by thieves who ransacked the entire lower part of it, and made off with all the plunder they could find without being discovered. What adds to the boldness of the robbery is, that the burglars entered the house through one of the front parlor windows which they forced open. It was in the most frequented part of one of the most public avenues in the City, and it is difficult to understand how so bold a robbery could have occurred, and for the burglars to escape without detection, if there were any policemen on that beat during the night at all.

LOOKING A GIFT HORSE IN THE MOUTH.—The London Illustrated News, in a chirruping leader on the gift of the Arctic discovery ship Resolute by our Government to Great Britain, says it was an atonement for our discourtesy in sending back Mr. CHAMPION. But, if there had been a hint that the generosity of the act was to be construed in such a way, we are very sure that the Resolute would never have been sent back. The trifling cost of the gift will be repaid a thousand fold by the interchange of kindly feelings and civilities which it has led to, and it is greatly to be regretted that any allusion should be made in connection with the event calculated in the slightest degree to awaken an unpleasant recollection. In a few days the officers who carried out the Resolute will return to us in a national ship, sent by the British Government, and we trust that her officers will be treated in a manner to strengthen the kindly and generous feelings which were shown by the people of Great Britain, from the Throne downwards, on the arrival of the Resolute at Portsmouth.

"E. M." IN ALBANY.—The great weather-wizard of Brooklyn Heights, E. MERIAM, has gone to Albany to enjoy the cold, and write letters to the Journal of Commerce. From his last communication we learn that he froze his hands while escorting a woman across the river on the ice. Ever alive to the welfare of mankind, the philosopher states that by plunging his hands in cold water fifteen minutes he completely restored the sensation of his fingers and prevented any harm being done by the frost. There is nothing new in the remedy; it has long been known that in Russia when a man's nose is frost-bitten he immediately plunges it into the snow; and all boys when their ears are touched with the frost make a similar application. But Mr. MERIAM thinks it a safe rule not to take it for granted that the public knows anything; he no sooner learns anything himself than he lets the rest of the world participate in the benefits of his discovery.

ONE OF THE PARDONED.—We have before announced, as an item of news, that one of the men whom Governor CLARK pardoned out of the State Prison had committed an assault with a slung shot upon a man whose life was considered in danger. The man has since died, and the Coroner's Jury have rendered a verdict that he came to his death by blows inflicted by three men, one of whom was BERNARD ROONEY. This is the man who had served out less than two years of the ten to which he was sentenced for a rape, when Governor CLARK let him out of the State Prison, just before going out of office himself. We shall, we fear, soon hear of other acts of violence from some of the other felons whom the Governor in his ill-advised clemency set at liberty.

Found Dead in his Room.

A man, supposed to be named EDWIN J. HAYNES, and a resident of New-Jersey, was found dead in his room at Tammany Hall last night. The deceased was about 45 years of age. He has put up several times within the past year at Tammany Hall.

Coroner CORNEY viewed the body, and an inquest will be held upon it to-day.

FROM WASHINGTON.

[illegible]

Special Correspondence of The Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7, 1857.

THE MINNESOTA LAND-GRAB.

The parties interested in the Minnesota Land-Grab are not a little annoyed to see [illegible] which the DAILY TIMES has made of their scheme. A number of them held a little caucus to-night in a private room in the National Hotel, and talked the matter over. Their comments are a little amusing. Some of the parties think the exposure will do good, because it advertises the will and ability of the scheme to pay for votes, and will thus bring them members of Congress who are "shark," to name the terms on which they will "go in." A pretty commentary, surely! They all concur in one point, and that is, in swearing that the bill shall pass; and they boast very loudly of their ability to pass it—saying their men are counted, labeled, priced and sent.

Well, gentlemen, that is so, at least in part. You have your men labeled, &c.; but you will find an hour of reckoning, and your chuckle I expect it. Some of your merchandise will prove to be just as villainous as you suppose it to be,—just as shameless as you want it to be. But you are relying upon a few honest men whom you have wheedled into the idea that your scheme is right, but whose eyes are opening, and who will fail you at the critical moment. You are relying upon others whose loyalty is supposed to render their votes for the bill a certainty; but who, with the support they will receive from the press in exposing your villainy, will dare to follow their honest convictions, and to abandon your wicked plot, relying upon the honesty of their constituents to sustain them for a vote which may seem at first to be against their local interests. You rely upon still others who have no honor, no shame and no conscience to save them from any piece of profitable roguery that can be successfully concealed, but who, in fear of the exposures which will be made if you carry out your present purposes, and which they must know can be made, will hesitate how they touch the prospective carrion on which they have been feasting their eyes for some time past.

No member will be able in this case to plead ignorance. The iniquity of this Minnesota Land-Grab is now so palpable upon its face, that it will daunt the representative of any honest constituency who shall be unwise enough to vote for it. The iniquity has been exposed. It has been held up directly before their eyes, and posted in the press so that he who runs may read. Let us see now who is prepared to pass a bill giving away, in one lump, alternate sections of the public lands, six miles wide on each side of 1,700 miles of railroad, in the Territory of Minnesota, and to frame the bill therefor, too, in a peculiar and unusual manner for the special purpose of securing the funds to pay for the votes necessary to pass the bill. Of course all these remarks are predicated upon the supposition that the bill comes up for action in the shape now contemplated. Let it be shorn of its extravagant proportions, reduced to moderate and reasonable dimensions, and put in the usual shape of such bills, and a vote for it will not be prima facie evidence of wrong; but the matter has been so smashed already by the action of last session and the present, that it will be far safer for the public interests, and safer too for the dignity and character of Congress, to throw it overboard altogether until another Congress shall convene. I shall have some more to say on this subject soon, if I can succeed in verifying some further developments which have just been whispered in my ear.

MR. STEPHENS' SPEECH.

The speech made in the House to-day by Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, fell far short of his efforts of several years ago, and failed, I am sure, to satisfy his Southern friends, even, that the Democratic Party of the present day holds a position upon the question of "the right of the people to govern themselves," consistent with the Democracy of JACKSON and of JEFFERSON.

He was followed by Hon. HENRY WINTER DAVIS, of Maryland, in an eloquent and effective speech, which was listened to with great attention. Mr. D. reviewed rapidly the history of the Slavery agitation of late years, and proved beyond question the responsibility of the Democratic Party therefor. He exposed the hypocrisy of their advocacy of "popular sovereignty," when in the South, everywhere, candor compels the admission that they won't allow this popular sovereignty to the people in the Territories. He successfully established, too, the fact that nobody in the country, except some Garrisonian Abolitionist, ever proposed to interfere with the sovereign right of States to form their own institutions.—or ever disputed, practically, the equality of the States, except in one instance, and that was when the Democratic Party, in the Texas Act, provided for the erection of several States, the character of which that act fixed. Mr. DAVIS also mercilessly ridiculed the troubles which the Democracy are certain to have in the attempt to divide the spoils among the various constituents of the conglomerate mass which that party at the present day comprises. In conclusion, he read a lecture to the Republicans for being provoked into what he called sectionalism,—but for all that, coming from a Maryland American, his speech, as a whole, was fair, liberal and effective.

MR. HARLAN'S CASE.

The question pending in the Senate with reference to the right of Mr. HARLAN, of Iowa, to the seat he now holds as Senator from that State is a very interesting one, and is discussed with a good deal of ability on both sides. The facts are in substance as follows: The Constitution of Iowa provides for the election of United States Senators by the Legislature in Joint Convention. Both branches of the Legislature agreed to meet in such joint Convention on the 13th of December, 1854. The joint Convention had several meetings without an election, adjourning over from day to day. Finally, on the 6th of January, 1855, (to which the Convention had adjourned,) the Speaker of the House announced the special order, the joint Convention for the election of a Senator, and sent a message to the Senate announcing the fact. In the meantime the Democratic Senate, having become aware of the fact that arrangements had been made for the election of Mr. HARLAN, adjourned, in order to defeat the Convention. The minority members of the Senate, however, entered the Joint Convention, a president pro tem. was elected, and Mr. HARLAN was chosen Senator by the votes of a majority of all the members of the Convention, present and absent.

It is now claimed, (by those who oppose Mr. HARLAN's title to his seat, that the body which elected him was not a joint Convention of the Legislature, because the Senate had adjourned over, on the day of the election, without any order to meet the House in Convention,—and that it was not competent for the House to act alone, or for individual members of the Senate to act with them when the Senate, in Senatorial session, had not agreed to adjourn to meet the House for the purpose named. On the other side, it is answered, in Mr. HARLAN's behalf, that the two Houses, having ordered the joint Convention, and that Convention having regularly organized, the latter became a sort of distinct body, with the right to adjourn from one day to another, or to a day certain, and that, when the day to which it adjourned arrived, the Convention had the right, power and duty of meeting and proceeding to business, without awaiting any new order from either branch of the Legislature.

To this it is rejoined that the Constitution of the United States prescribes that Senators shall be elected by the Legislatures or General Assemblies of the States, and this requires concurrent action of the two branches, which it is claimed was not had in this case. The answer is that the Legislature has the right to prescribe the mode in which it shall elect the U. S. Senators; that the Legislature of Iowa did prescribe the election by Joint Convention, and that the Convention having been formed under the law providing for its formation, that Convention, for the purpose named, had the full power of the entire Legislature—was, in fact, the two branches combined into one body, exercising the power of the whole in that form, and with no restriction as to its time of meeting or adjourning, nor the mode in which it should fulfill the duty assigned it. Thus it is contended, in short, that the order of the Joint Convention for its own meeting to elect a Senator upon any particular day, was made by concurrent action of the two houses, superior to any order which either House had the power to make in conflict therewith, and, of course, superior to the order of adjournment made by the Senate, with the mistaken idea that it could thus evade an issue growing out of a complete act of legislation by both branches. There is still another point made in the case by those who contest Mr. HARLAN's right—to wit: that he has not been elected in accordance with the terms of the Constitution of the United States, which requires the election of Senators by the Legislature—it being contended, that he is not chosen by the "Legislature" unless chosen by a majority of each branch. The answer is, that then the Joint-Convention system is unconstitutional; and also that the uniform practice of the past has settled that this requirement of the Constitution is fully realized in the vote of the two branches ordering the Joint Convention. If this is not so, then two-thirds the sitting Senators are not constitutionally elected.

Mr. HARLAN called up the case himself to-day, expressing an earnest desire that it should be disposed of early as possible. The principle at stake is an important one, and will probably be discussed all the present week at least. I am inclined to think he will be sustained in his seat by a small majority; but, if he is ousted, the Legislature of Iowa, now sitting, will undoubtedly return him at once by a vote about which there can be no mistake. While England is embroiled in Asia, she will permit the United States [illegible]

NEW-YORK CITY.

[illegible] Commissioners held their usual weekly meeting on Wednesday, in Blackwell's Island, the President, Hon. GORHAM C. VANDERBILT, in the Chair. The following members of the Commission were present: [illegible] FISHER, GRINNELL, GARRISON, and CARDOZO. The report of the Superintendent of Ward's Island was read, laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

[illegible] Report of the Superintendent.—The following report of Capt. PILSBURY, Superintendent of Ward's Island, was read, and ordered to be published in the usual report:

[illegible] Commissioners of Emigration:

GENTLEMEN: In compliance with the resolution passed by your Board at the last meeting, I herewith submit my report of the workings and condition of the Emigrant Refuge and Hospital under my charge, from Dec. 31, 1855, to Dec. 31, 1856.

It was with feelings of considerable embarrassment and misgiving that I accepted and entered upon the duties of the office with which your Board honored me. The character and condition of the Institution was far from inviting; yet the responsibility imposed in me by your honorable Board, determined my acceptance of the appointment, and I assumed the responsibilities of the care and government of the Institution on the first day of October, 1855.

My first efforts were to establish order where none existed, and to improve the condition of the whole establishment, by disciplinary and moral regulations, for the general government of the subordinates, employes and inmates. Although more than one third of the employes had been discharged from the house, by your order, just prior to my taking charge of the Institution, I have, from time to time, dispensed with the services of a large additional number of persons employed and paid by the Commissioners, because the duties and labor performed by them could be done by other employes in addition to what they were then doing, or by the inmates without pay. A large amount has thus been saved in wages and rations, while, it is believed, that the services and labor by them rendered has been more satisfactorily performed than heretofore.

It has been my desire and determination, so far as depended on me, to have an efficient, humane, but economical administration of the affairs of the Institution; to enforce order and regularity in every department; that while all necessary and reasonable comfort and attention should be given to the welfare and health of the inmates, no extraordinary expense should be incurred or unnecessary articles called for and used. I have, therefore, from time to time, introduced and established such measures of reform, retrenchment, and economy, as it seemed to me the distinguished trustees of the Commission imperiously demanded, and such, as I believed, would meet with the approbation of the Commissioners. There has, however, been some increased average expense arising from the diminution of the number of inmates paying patients—the small number treated in the several wards, especially in the lying-in, recovery and some others. In some of these wards there have been treated and cared for, only from ten to twenty paying patients, while they are capable of accommodating from forty to sixty patients each. They may be, and no doubt are, more comfortable than if the wards were full; but it will be readily seen, that the average expense must be much increased over what it would be, were the number in each of the wards, twenty or thirty, the present number, each of these wards requiring a warm, fuel, lights, cleaning, and a proportionate expense, as those having a full number of paying patients. The facilities, however, for the medical care and treatment of the patients—the separate, extra room and other advantages for the recovering, favorable to rapid cure and health, may, and perhaps do, outweigh the objection of the extra average expense.

The employment of labor in the open air when the weather permits, is deemed to be the best means to promote and secure health, as well as habits of industry calculated to fit them for labor and usefulness on leaving the Institution. I have kept many of the partially insane and convalescent inmates at work during the Spring, Summer, and Autumn months, in the garden and yard, in cleaning the grounds and other light labor, while those who have entirely recovered or were sent here to be put at work, have been employed in that work, building sea wall, grading the land, whitewashing, repairing the Wards and buildings in or[illegible] order, all calculated to instill into their minds habits of industry, self-reliance, and dependence on themselves, as they go forth from here into the world (many of them) new world.

The following table shows the amount of the vegetable crop raised on the farm by the labor of the inmates, [illegible]

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| [illegible] | [illegible] bush. | Parsnips | 80 bush. |
| [illegible] | [illegible] bush. | Cucumbers | 12 bush. |
| [illegible] | [illegible] bush. | Melons | 55 bush. |
| [illegible] | [illegible] bush. | Peppers | 6 bush. |
| [illegible] | [illegible] bush. | Radishes | 12 bush. |
| [illegible] | [illegible] bush. | Sweet Corn, ears | 64 bush. |
| [illegible] | 37 bush. | Cabbage | 33,000 heads |
| [illegible] | 60 bush. | Lettuce | 5,000 heads |
| [illegible] | 52 bush. | Celery | 6,000 heads |
| [illegible] | 100 bush. | Hay | 35 tons |

Only one person (or paid man) was employed in the care, cultivation and gathering of the above products. The labor has been performed by the larger number of boys and invalids, incapable of taking care of themselves, living for themselves outside.

On the death of Gen. Jos. Mc[illegible], Chairman of Ward's Island Committee, I called your attention to the miserable condition of the eighty insane women then on the Island. By the action of your Board I was authorized and directed to send to the Asylum on Blackwell's Island such as were noisy and hard to control, and to transfer all others to wards more suitable for their proper care and treatment.

I took immediate steps to carry out the wishes of the Commissioners as expressed in their resolution, passed early in the 6th of June, so far as I was able to do so, with the wood-built building at my control, by building separate wards, with yards attached, for the insane and diseased, that should afford more suitable and comfortable accommodation, and transferred to them their detached inmates from the old Barracks, to their new quarters, as soon as they were in readiness to receive them. And, although their condition is much improved, it is not yet such as suffering humanity, in the form of "minds in ruin," calls for at your hands. Our accommodations for them, even now, are not equal to what they so much need. I can only repeat what I said to you in my communication before alluded to—there are no buildings on the island properly constructed for classifying, or that would enable us to separate the noisy from the more calm and quiet—the partially insane from those hopelessly so, and the violent and noisy from the weak and inoffensive. I cannot, therefore, of this class are to be considered here, dismiss this subject without urging on the attention of the Commissioners, not only the importance, but the actual necessity of an Insane Asylum on Ward's Island, separate from all other buildings, suitable and convenient for the reception and care of this unfortunate class of emigrants, where they may receive all that medical, moral and physical attention and treatment, which their condition imperatively and which is so well calculated to bring back and restore the disordered mind to its primitive condition of order and health.

The school, as organized some years since under the care of a male and female teacher, was continued for some time; but, believing that little or no benefit resulted to the children, either from their instruction or example, by advice of the Committee I discharged them, and for a short time the school was discontinued. It was, however, on the first day of August, reorganized as a Ward School, and placed under the care and supervision of the Board of Education, and now is in a most flourishing and prosperous condition. A pleasant and commodious apartment has been fitted and furnished for general school-room, with recitation-rooms adjoining, affording all requisite accommodations for the welfare and improvement of the children. The principal teacher, Mrs. BOOTMAN, is a lady of excellent character and qualifications, whose experience for several years as Principal of the Public School at Yorkville, commends her to our highest confidence. She is assisted by two efficient young ladies, competent and well qualified for their respective duties. This school has already proved beneficial. The same course is pursued here as in other public schools of the City; and the rapid improvement of the children in reading and other studies, in singing, and general deportment, all go to show the wisdom of placing this school under the organization of the Board of Education. The average number of scholars is about one hundred and fifty, who, apart from school hours, are under the management and control of the Superintendent and his assistants, when due consideration is given to their wants and comfort by allowing them the proper exercise and recreation, such as running, jumping, &c.—in the play-room and open air, designed to strengthen and invigorate both body and mind.

The moral and religious instruction of the inmates has been confided by your Board to two Chaplains, Rev. THOMAS GOOD, Protestant, and Rev. A. MANAHAN, Catholic. Services have been held on each Sunday in the two chapels, and in the Protestant in both the English and German languages. The attendance has been large and constant. The chaplains have also visited the various wards and other apartments of the Institution on Sunday and other days of the week, distributing books, cheering and consoling the sick and dying by their advice and ministrations. The Protestant children, from forty to sixty, are collected twice on every Sunday in the chapel as a Sunday School, under the charge and instruction of the Matron, Mrs. JAMES and Mrs. MALLONEE; although not connected with the Island, have kindly continued to instruct the German children in reading, singing, &c. The Catholic children, numbering from 120 to 150, able to attend, are assembled in the Catholic chapel every Sunday morning, under the care and instruction of an assistant Matron, Mrs. BROWN, and others. Several of the nurses have also rendered valuable assistance in conducting the Sabbath Schools. The Sabbath on the Island, the past year, has been observed as a day of quiet and order—emphatically "a day of rest."

The present medical system, with competent assistant physicians and surgeons, whose duties and power are confined to the medical and surgical treatment of the inmates, and the dieting of the quantity and quality, mode of cooking and distributing the food to the patients in the hospital, I consider well calculated to secure the prompt care and treatment of the sick and diseased, and especially so in cases requiring immediate attention and relief.

Notwithstanding the large proportion constantly in the hospitals, the general health of the institution has been good, the mortality in proportion to the number in the Institution, [illegible] average of the last five years. Much care and attention has been given to the cleanliness of the buildings, yards, and premises, adjoining the same, the different wards being frequently and thoroughly scrubbed and whitewashed, and the grounds kept cleared and in good order.

A large amount of labor has been performed, all of which it would be difficult to specify; but among the principal items are the following. The grounds between the park and the nursery have been graded and laid out for grass. Considerable stone has been taken from the quarry, prepared, and used for walks and for macadamizing the road to the dock. The basements of some of the buildings have been put in good condition and much improved; new sewers have been built, and old ones cleansed and relaid; the chimneys and blinds to the different buildings which were out of order have been repaired; the waste-water which formerly collected under and around the wash-house is now carried off by a sewer; no wagon, plows, carts, &c., have been kept in good repair, and some new ones necessary for the use of the Institution have been built by the inmates, by whom are also made all the coffins required for the use of the Institution. The reservoir has been re-cemented; over two hundred iron bedsteads have been repaired; shoes and clothing for more than seven thousand persons, (who have been cared for in the Institution during the past year,) have been repaired and kept in order; over thirty tons of hay have been cut. The grading of the land between the old hospital building, containing the offices, and the river had been begun, as also the building a sea-wall along the same; which improvements, when completed, (as they probably will be in another season,) will add much to the beauty of the Island. A small wash-house, bathing-room, and shed attached to the new hospital have been built; fifteen hundred tons of coal were received at the dock and carted to the yard; all which labor has been performed by the male inmates, under the directions and orders of the officers of the Institution. The female inmates of the Refuge department have assisted the matrons and nurses in caring for the sick, washing and ironing, cooking, cleaning, &c., and have manufactured and made up more than fourteen thousand separate garments and articles of bedding, clothing, &c., for the male and female inmates, and children and infants' use. A large proportion of this kind of work and labor has heretofore been performed by "paid help."

The deputy, clerks, steward and other officers and employes have devoted their whole time to the discharge of their various duties, and have given me general satisfaction. The worthy matron, Mrs. JAMES, who has been identified nine years with the care and management of the female inmates, has rendered me valuable service, as have also the two assistant matrons, Mrs. MAZZOY and Mrs. BROWN, by their industrious and faithful attention to their respective duties.

The annexed tables will show the number cared for during the year, the daily admissions, sex, age and distribution, nativity, year of arrival, ports sailed from, daily discharges to the Labor Exchange, discharges to the Marine Hospital, and days spent on the Island during the past year by infants born here and in the United States, and admitted to the Institution after birth.

Charged with the care of all the buildings and land connected with the Refuge and Hospital, and the supervision of all the property of every description belonging to the Commissioners, the appointment and dismissal at pleasure, and the government and control of all the subordinate officers, and of persons employed in the Refuge and Hospital, or other parts of the establishment on W. I. (excepting the chaplains and physicians) I have not been unmindful of the responsibilities of the office, nor of my obligation to the Board of Commissioners; and, while I have endeavored to discharge the various duties devolving upon me fearlessly, independently, and, I trust, conscientiously, I have not been willing that any person should interfere with or assume power delegated to me as chief officer of the institution.

If the management and condition of the institution since it has been under my care, has been such as to meet the expectations of the Commissioners and the friends of the Commission, who urged my acceptance of the office, I shall, in a measure, be reconciled to the seclusion of myself and family from society and many of the privileges of life.

All which is respectfully submitted.

AMOS PILSBURY, Superintendent.

WARD'S ISLAND, Jan. 7, 1857.

The following is a summary of the tables referred to in the reports:

Dr. CARMICHAEL, Surgeon-in-chief on Ward's Island, reported that during the past year 1,756 cases were treated in the surgical department, of which 333 were in hospital at beginning of the year, and 1,423 were admitted during the year. Discharged, during the year, 1,401; died, 53. Remaining at end of year, 302. Per centage of mortality, 3.01. There was no epidemic during the year, but an unusual number of incurable cases.

Dr. FAY, Physician-in-Chief of Ward's Island, reports: In Hospital, Jan. 1, 1856, 776, admitted since, 4,968; born, 406. Total cases, 6,147. Discharged during the year, 4,979; died, 388. Total, 5,367. Remaining Dec. 31, 1856, 780. Of the deaths 299 were over 19 years of age, 65 between 19 and 1 year, 24 under 1 year. Per centage of mortality 6.51.

Mr. KENNEDY reports the arrivals at Castle Garden during December at, 24 vessels with 4,199 bondable passengers, and 155 not liable to bond. Their cash funds amounted to $283,305, or an average of $64 48 a head.

Master of Dusters in Union-square.

Union-square presents a singular spectacle in the early morning now-a-days. Yesterday morning the big gate at the south end was thrown open, and the dogs of the sifters of ashes with their wagon loads of cinders, entered one after another, followed by their German proprietors with their sifting apparatus in hand. Then commenced such a "raising of the dust" as would out-do the best efforts of a New-England housewife in house-cleaning time. What with the rattling of half-consumed coal in tin sifters, and the barking of dogs, and the fragments of ashes and dust rolling upward like smoke, and the occasional exclamations in their own tongue of the men and their crews, Union-square seemed to our dust-dimmed vision, as we stood in the midst of it, like some battle-field of the Revolution, with a plentiful squadron of Hessians engaged in the fray. If a sudden vitality were infused into the nostrils of the brazen effigy of WASHINGTON just outside the Park, there would be a tremendous sneezing some of these mornings without a doubt. We cannot imagine why these dust-makers are admitted with their ash-carts into this beautiful square. It was only of

"The ashes of the just"

that the poet averred to

"Smell sweet and blossom in the dust."

Coal ashes have no such delightful properties.

Appearances Saved.

Messrs. MCSPEDDON & BAKER have been the Corporation Printers for some time back. But those who have seen the pamphlet copies of the recent Message of the Mayor were astonished to find them printed by "CHAS. W. BAKER," and not by the old and well-known firm. This is explained by the fact that Mr. MCSPEDDON has become Alderman of the Nineteenth Ward, and of course it wouldn't do for one of the City Fathers to draw immense sums for Corporation printing, as MCSPEDDON & BAKER have done during the last few years. So henceforth (nominally at least) CHAS. W. BAKER alone will do the drawing at at the tap of the treasury.

Building Operations.

We have more buildings going up at this season of the year than usual. The walls of BOWER & MCNAMEE's new warehouse are only half finished; the stores lately burned, extending from Warren to Murray-street, are rebuilding; while the elaborate buff blocks that are to form the front of the Continental Bank, in Nassau-street, are still on their winding way upward. The edifice known as Johnson's Hotel, comprising Nos. 4 and 6 Warren, is now in process of demolition, and on its site Mr. L. V. HOFFMAN (owner of the marble building on Broadway occupied by DEVLIN & Co.) designs to erect handsome marble-front warehouses.

☞ The matter of returning the Resolute has been admirably managed so far. There is only one chance left for any of our people to make fools of themselves in the affair—that is, when the Britishers arrive with Capt. HARTSTENE and his officers and crew. We hope, however, that even this little opportunity will be omitted, and that when the whole thing has become history, there will be nothing to mar the beauty of the pleasant episode in our international dealings.

☞ A Jew presides over the Board of Councilmen. More than that, he was chosen unanimously by the Christian Board, and nobody shuddered when according to the Jewish custom, he was sworn with his head covered and on the Old Testament. Don't pop-eye as a bigoted people formerly, President JONAS B. PHILLIPS, by the way, is not JONAS B. PHILLIPS, who was lately the Assistant District-Attorney, but PHILIP B. JONAS, the Collector in the Register's Office.

The Lady Doctors.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

It is doubtless true, as the Times of yesterday (7th) says, that "Lady Doctors are coming to be an institution among us." To this I give my consent, and think the movement which is making in that direction augurs well for the community. This I deem, also, rather the public sentiment, so the ladies may attempt this profession with everything to encourage their laudable efforts. But, a word in regard of the title, or prefix, "Doctor." Why should a lady who has studied medicine, and who follows the practice of it, have applied to her any other title of her profession than is proper to her SEX? The term Doctor is masculine. It is so universally. It is inappropriately employed to designate a physician who is a male. Hence, to say "Dr. Julia," "Dr. Emily," is to violate the proprieties, and the very force and nature of language.

On the contrary, the term "DOCTRESS" denotes a female; it is universally so understood. It defines SEX. It creates no obstacle to the success, or to the validity of the practice of the individual to whom it properly applies. She cannot say it does her injustice, or that it is improper, for it simply designates her according to her own nature or being.

It is proper to speak of a lady as a physician, i. e., a "female physician," or as a doctor, i. e., as a "female doctor," the qualifying term "female" doing away with the masculine objection. But when she is spoken of simply as a member of a profession, where the term "Doctor" is its masculine designation, she should be termed "Doctress." One great value to the community in having a class of female physicians of true science and worth of character, is in the preservation, distinctively, of the great fact, that they are female physicians, DOCTRESSES, indeed.

So "Preachers." The title of "Reverend," of "Bishop," to a lady, is absurd. If she cannot, with euphony of language, adopt the feminine termination, let her not fly to the other extreme and adopt the masculine. Hence, to say the "Rev. ANTOINETTE BROWN" is a philological error, far more objectionable than to say "ANTOINETTE BROWN, the lady," or "female preacher." E.

Lyceum of Natural History.

A stated meeting of the Lyceum of Natural History was held on Monday evening last, at the rooms of the Medical College, in Fourteenth-street, where their regular weekly meetings have been kept up for a period of forty years.

They have a valuable Library, mostly scientific, and a large Cabinet—the latter at present stored away for want of room. They are receiving additions to both at almost every meeting.

The Society numbers among its members many of the most celebrated names in the paths of science, both in our own country and abroad. Its officers at this time are:

Major JOSEPH DELAFIELD, President.
W. COOPER, Esq., First Vice-President.
J. G. BREVOORT, Second Vice-President.
J. H. REDFIELD, Corresponding Secretary.
R. H. BROWNE, Recording Secretary.
O. W. MORRIS, Librarian.

It has been supposed that the Society had ceased operations, since they left their building in Broadway, but they have been steadily, yet unostentatiously, pursuing their course. We trust to see them soon in a place where their labors can be appreciated.

☞ The exterior line for our City, on the North River between Fourteenth and Thirty-seventh streets suggested by the Harbor Commissioners, very essentially differs from that proposed by the Common Council. The latter would give the owners of the water-front some 163,600 square yards for City lots, that the Commissioners' line would retain for purposes of navigation.

☞ NATHAN BANGS, Jr., whose recent decease has been noticed in the TIMES, left no will. The statement to the contrary made in some of the City papers is erroneous.

☞ Rev. Dr. MAGEE, of Elizabethtown, had, as a New-Year's present from some members of his congregation, a purse of $2,500.

New-Year's Presents.

From the Independent.

We learn that Rev. Dr. BURLINGTON, pastor of the Clinton-avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, was called upon at his house, on New-Year's day, and presented by some gentlemen in behalf of his congregation, with a pleasing token of $500, as an evidence of their lively interest in the pastor and his ministry. His two daughters were also made the members of the "Home of the Friendless" by the contributions of the children.

Dr. CHENEY was agreeably surprised with a purse of $400, while Mrs. CHENEY received $200, together with an elegant piece of furniture. The congregation of the Church of the Puritans participated very generally in this friendly gift.

The pastor of Plymouth Church received from some of the young men of his charge a beautiful landscape oil-painting; and from an unknown quarter, a magnificent statue in bronze.

Rev. T. L. CUYLER, of the Reformed Dutch Church in Market-street, this City, was waited upon, on the same day, and politely informed that his congregation, without consulting a word with the pastor, had taken the gross liberty of raising his salary.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. POSNI, leaders of the choir of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, were presented, on New-Year's eve by the members of the choir, with a handsome service of silver plate. The occasion was the retirement of Mr. and Mrs. POSNI, after two years' service.

These Children.

Mr. TRACY, the kind-hearted and efficient agent of the New-York Children's Aid Society, arrived here on Christmas morning, with his assortment of "little ones." They were a fine-looking and intelligent collection, well-dressed, (for the most part,) clean and orderly, and although they did not go off as speedily as the first lot, they have all been taken, and provided with excellent homes and the best of guardians. We take pleasure in saying that of the forty that first came and were provided for here, mostly all have given satisfaction; in short that this benevolent scheme works admirably. In the schools we have recently visited, both in and out of the village, some of them are successfully indicted in the spelling-book and reader, and taking place by the side of those who have never felt want. This scheme of finding homes and happiness for the poor and suffering, is one of the greatest of modern charitable institutions.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

Deaths from Scalds.

Two inquests were held yesterday upon the bodies of children who came to their deaths from scalds, received by the accidental upsetting of tea-pots upon them. One of the deceased was named ANN FITZWARRICK. Her age was 16 months. Her parents reside at No. 85 Sixth-avenue. The other was named JULIA ANN GAULT, aged 2 years. She resided at No. 6 Roosevelt-street.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

Legal Items.

The First District Court has not been in session for some time past, on account of the severe illness of Judge GREEN. As this is the District Court at which more business is done than in any other of this class in the City, the vacancy has been severely felt. Judge GREEN is now better, and will, probably, sit again on Monday next.

Quite an extensive business has recently been commenced in the recovery of what have always heretofore been considered as very bad debts. It seems that our merchants are frequently defrauded by foreigners, who, having obtained a stock of goods on credit, clear out for Europe, leaving nothing but their debts and their sweet names behind them. These men, however, often have property at home, and the laws of most of the European States are very liberal in such cases towards the defrauded creditors. A firm of Germans is largely engaged in the collection of these debts, and, having correspondents in all parts of Europe, they have been very successful in obtaining information of the absconding debtors, and generally recovering, at least, a part of the sums due. It is a great convenience for our merchants.

Among the cases included in the calendar of the Court of Appeals is one entitled Orlando H. Heap, respondent, vs. John C. Fremont, appellant. As the number of the case is 264 it probably will not be reached for two or three years from the present time. The appeal is taken from the First Judicial District.

We understand that it is the intention to try Humphreys on several further indictments, of which there remain twenty-six, for forgery, untried, besides the one for issuing fraudulent bank bills. It is further whispered that the present Grand Jury will probably bring in some other indictments against him. The other trials will most likely not come off for some months yet.

The famous case of the Mechanics' Bank against the New-York and New-Haven Railroad Company, in which a new trial was ordered by the Court of Appeals, stands No. 150 on the calendar of the Superior Court, and will probably be reached before a very long time. It will be recollected that this case involved the validity of the alleged fraudulent shares issued by Robert Schuyler. The Superior Court on the previous trial decided for the Bank, (Judge Campbell alone dissenting,) thus declaring their validity. The Court of Appeals, however, at their June session, after argument for the Bank by Daniel Lord and others, and for the Company by William Curtis Noyes and George Wood, unanimously reversed the decision and ordered a new trial. In consequence of this decision, most of the similar cases in the State Courts have been discontinued, but are commenced in the United States Courts, as against a Corporation of neither State. These cases will probably go up to the United States Supreme Court.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM—Jan. 8.

Before Hon. Justice Davies.

DECISIONS.

THE RECEIVER FOR THE NICARAGUA TRANSIT COMPANY APPOINTED.

William Patten et al. vs. Cornelius Vanderbilt and The Nicaragua Transit Company.—This action, the facts in which have been very fully reported in the TIMES, it will be remembered was brought to have a receiver appointed for the effects of the Company, and to authorise the sale, by him, of the four steamers of the line. Some days since Judge DAVIES rendered his decision granting the motion, but it was not until yesterday that the order was agreed upon. His Honor ordered that ex-Judge R. P. Cowles be appointed receiver of the effects of the Company, and an immediate sale should take place. Mr. Vanderbilt to be paid $10,000 for the amount of his advances to the Company, and be allowed to bid on the property to the amount of his incumbrances. The surplus accruing from the sale after the settlement of these claims to be paid into Court for the benefit of the other creditors. The receiver to give $500,000 security.

Valentine vs. Valentine.—Report of referee confirmed and judgment of partition granted.

Before Hon. Judge Rhodes.

Runk vs. St. John.—Referred to R. P. Cowles, Esq.

SUPERIOR COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Hon. Justice Slosson.

DECISIONS.

York vs. Leuel & Mead.—Ordered that unless defendant Mead pay the $460 into Court within five days from service of notice of this order, the order of Jan. 3, granting twenty days additional time to answer, be recalled.

Before Hon. Justice Bosworth.

Cromwell vs. Roach.—Case settled.
DeBost vs. Cutter.—Case settled.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Judge Ingraham.

Charles B. Carter vs. Robert Davis.—Judgment for plaintiff on demurrer, with costs.

Ellen Kiernan vs. James Kiernan.—Order of reference to Hamilton W. Robinson, Esq.

Edward C. Thomas vs. Lewis W. Bistres.—Motion to set aside execution denied, with $10 costs.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS—THURSDAY.

Before the City Judge.

On the opening of Court this morning, Mr. Richard Busteed, addressing the Court, stated that he had been engaged by Policeman Lieutenant O'Keefe to defend him on a charge of assaulting a Sabbath preacher named Faulkner. As Corporation Counsel, he was not prepared to defend one of the officers of the City against an action brought by the people, but the Mayor had communicated to him, through Lieutenant O'Keefe himself, that a policeman ought to be protected by the law officer of the Government, and he (Mr. Busteed) was consequently in Court to do his duty. But, being taken unawares in this matter, he was not prepared at present. He requested that time might be allowed to procure a certificate from the Chief of Police to show that the defendant, when committing the assault complained of, was actually in the discharge of his duty.

After some debate between Mr. Busteed and the Assistant District-Attorney, the case was adjourned to next week.

Patrick Cosgrove, a very bad character, nicknamed Patrick Cockroach, a beater and bully on all occasions when a Democrat, with a dollar to spare, wanted his services, was charged with assaulting Police Officer Patrick Murphy, on the 16th of June last, while in the discharge of his duty. Murphy heard a noise in a porter-house in the Fourth Ward, and on entering the premises found two men clenched on the ground, and fighting to their heart's content. Policeman Murphy interfered. Cosgrove, alias Cockroach, the bully, attacked him, and "butted him in the face with the roof of his head." Policeman Murphy, in mild retaliation, beat Cosgrove on the scalp with his club. Cosgrove, alias Cockroach, seized a pitcher, according to the prosecution, a pint-pot according to Mr. Busteed; a very small half-pint according to Cockroach, and therewith beat, bruised, and damaged the skull and ribs of Murphy. Murphy deposed that three of his ribs were broken, and were mended the next day by the doctor of the police-station, who applied a piece of sticking-plaster over the skin. Mr. Busteed scouted the idea that broken ribs could be mended with sticking-plaster. Judge RUSSELL, somewhat dubitably, seemed of the same opinion, but did not state his conviction. Mr. Busteed defied the policeman, or the District-Attorney, or anybody, to show a police regulation that granted liberty to a policeman to strike a respectable man like Cosgrove, alias Cockroach, on the head. He would give $1,000 to see such a regulation.

Mr. Sedgwick laughingly told Mr. Busteed, that if the Mayor were to ask his opinion on that point, he would, as Corporation Counsel, be obliged to eat his own words. More debate followed, and ultimately a verdict of guilty was rendered by the Jury, and Cockroach, who has several other indictments against him, and is one of the most wicked rowdies in the City, was leniently sentenced by the City Judge, RUSSELL, to six months in the Penitentiary.

William Quinn was next charged with robbing Mr. Minjin of his watch. There was no evidence, and Quinn was acquitted. The Grand Jury should not have found a bill against Quinn.

James Knoxkton was convicted of petit larceny, and sentenced to the penitentiary for six months.

James McMahon pleaded guilty to forgery in the fourth degree, in uttering two counterfeit $5 bills on the Danville Bank, Pennsylvania. Ann O'Connor, who was indicted with him, was discharged. Sentence on McMahon reserved.

SURROGATE'S COURT—JAN. 8.

Before A. W. Bradford, Esq.

WM. WRIGHT'S WILL.

In the matter of the Estate of William Wright.—Victor Barsalon, claiming to be a creditor of the testator, having presented a petition for the payment of the demand, the executor interposed as a defence that he had regularly advertised for claims, that the demand in question had been presented for payment and had been rejected, and the petitioner failing to institute a suit at law for its recovery within six months thereafter, the claim was barred by the statute.

The statute relied on by the executor is 2 R. S., pp. 88, 89, §§ 34 to 38 inclusive. The Surrogate decided that the case was properly commenced, and in accordance with the statute, and therefore it was no bar to the proceedings.

WILL OF JOHN BLACK.

Surrogate BRADFORD has decided in the matter of the will of John Black, in favor of the last widow.

Mr. Black was married many years ago in New-Jersey and was divorced; he subsequently accumulated a large property and married a second Mrs. B. Both ladies claim his property. The divorce appears to have been regularly proven, hence there was no going back of the broad seal of New-Jersey, and the claim of Mrs. Black No. 2 to right of divorce is sustained, according to the terms of the will.

LONG ISLAND.

Convicted of Burglary.

A young sailor named GEORGE MILLER, indicted for burglary in the first degree, was tried in the Kings County Court of Sessions yesterday, before Judge MORRIS, and convicted of burglary in the second degree. From the testimony it appears that MILLER, on the night of the 4th of October, was discovered under a bed in the third story of house No. 461 Pacific-street, Brooklyn, occupied by Dr. BARR, as a hospital. Upon examining the premises a back door and window were found open, but apparently no force had been used. He made no attempt to escape when he was discovered, although he had an opportunity to do so, and was, in fact, intoxicated, and could give but little account of himself. He had nothing on but pantaloons and shirt, and no burglars tools or property was found upon his person. Being without friends or money, B. FRANK BROWNE, Esq., was assigned as his counsel. The Judge sentenced the prisoner to the lowest term, 5 years and 3 months in the State Prison.

Under the circumstances of the case, an effort will be made to obtain a pardon for MILLER, as it is believed by all cognizant of the case that he is not guilty of the offence implied by the sentence.

Fireman's Funeral.

The funeral of the fireman, SAMUEL TUTHILL, killed on Tuesday morning last at the burning of Poplar Hall, Brooklyn, took place yesterday afternoon from the Sands-street M. E. Church. His remains were escorted to Greenwood Cemetery by several hundred firemen. Hook and Ladder Co. No. 1, of which deceased was a member and Secretary, acted as pall bearers. The national flag on the City Hall was lowered to half-mast during the day.

Ice in the River.

The East River was much obstructed by ice during the day yesterday, and it was with the greatest difficulty at certain stages of the tide that the ferry-boats crossed at all. During the afternoon two of the South Ferry boats got into the ice, and were floated to the vicinity of Governor's Island, where they remained for several hours.

Death from Exposure.

A man named MICHAEL FARRELL took lodgings in TEUNERON's coal yard, on Atlantic-street, Brooklyn, Wednesday night, and was nearly dead from cold when discovered yesterday morning. He died soon after he was taken to the City Hospital. Deceased was a native of Ireland, aged about 40 years. The Coroner's Jury rendered a verdict of "Freezing to death."

Fire in Brooklyn.

About 1 o'clock yesterday a fire broke out in a small stable on Dikeman-alley, leading from Hudson-avenue, near Fort-street, which was entirely consumed, as was also a two-story frame dwelling adjoining. The stable was owned and occupied by a Mr. FITCH, and the house by Mr. WEBLOW. Total loss $1,000; no insurance.

Removal.

Assistant-Captain BERRY, of the Second District Police, Brooklyn, was removed yesterday to give place to PATRICK KENEFICK.

☞ The proceedings restraining Mr. B. H. BOOTH from taking the oath of office as Superintendent of the Poor, in Kings County, have been withdrawn.

NEW-JERSEY.

Escape from Jail.

Yesterday, HIRAM REYNOLDS and MRS. JOHN JOHNSON were arrested and committed to jail for trial, in default of $600 bail each, by Justice BURGESS, on the charge of aiding the escape, from the County Jail on Friday last, of their brother, MICHAEL REYNOLDS, who was awaiting trial for an indecent assault upon a colored woman, employed as a servant in a family in Weehawken. The officers was committed early in November. They conveyed a woman's apparel into the jail to him, which he put on and walked out without discovery. He is yet at large.

Killed by a Horse.

A lad twelve years of age, named GEORGE R. PRAY, son of Ephraim Pray, of Jersey City, was found on Wednesday afternoon in his fathers stable, lying in a state of insensibility under the foot of the horse. He died at midnight. His skull was fractured.

Suicide.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Connecticut, who cut his throat at MORRISON's Hotel, in the City of Hudson, on Monday night, died during Tuesday night. He undertook on Tuesday to hang himself, being determined to accomplish self-destruction.

New Masonic Lodge.

A new Lodge of the Order of Free and Accepted Masons, has been organized in Jersey City. It is entitled "Enterprise" Lodge.

☞ Rev. Mr. VERBRUGGE, the Jersey City Missionary, reports that during December, 3,241 tracts were distributed. The receipts to the relief fund were $10, which was disbursed. Clothing was also contributed and distributed.

THE SLAVE TROUBLES IN TENNESSEE.

Action of the Clarksville Committee of Safety—The Slaveholders Sharply Censured.

The Clarksville (Tenn.) Jeffersonian publishes the following resolutions, adopted by the Committee of Safety which was appointed in that place to investigate the causes of the recent negro troubles, and to suggest a remedy:

The committee appointed by the citizens of Clarksville to investigate the truth of the threatened insurrection of the negroes in this vicinity, to allay improper excitement, and to guard the community against danger, deem it appropriate to the occasion that we should give publicity to the following resolutions which have met our unanimous approval, and we recommend them as precautionary measures, which if followed will in our opinion, avert every danger and give perfect security to the citizens:

Resolved, That we recommend to our city and county authorities to suppress in the future, all assemblages of negroes under any pretext whatever, at frolics, balls, benevolent societies, or at public worships, where negro preachers officiate as preachers; and that our Ministers of the Gospel be requested to suspend absolutely, their habit of preaching to the negroes on occasions separate from their ordinary preaching as Ministers of the Gospel. Our churches are large enough for our whole population, white and black. We deem all such meetings, for negro preaching alone, improper; that they degenerate into unlawful assemblies, and are otherwise productive of incalculable mischief.

Resolved, That the owners of negroes ought not to give orders for their negroes to get buggies and carriages for pleasure on the Sabbath, or on any occasion whatever, and that it is the sense of this Committee, that the owners of livery stables in Clarksville ought not to hire horses and buggies to negroes; even when their masters permit it; for the reason that such indulgence to negroes promotes unauthorized intercourse among the slaves, and stimulates feelings wholly inconsistent with their duty to their masters, and the subordinate position they should occupy in reference to white people. It is further the sense of this Committee that our merchants and traders ought to abstain absolutely from dealing with the negroes, unless by the express permission of their masters; and on no account ought they to sell them firearms, ammunition, or other weapons, with or without their owners consent, if any should be so indiscreet as to grant it.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this Committee, the present evils that affect us are mainly to be attributed to the late Presidential elections, not meaning to cast more blame on this, than on that political party, we condemn the public discussion of all questions touching negro slavery, before crowds of people, in the hearing of vast multitudes of negroes. We further think Slaveholders are guilty of gross folly, when they permit their negroes to go to barbecues and other public gatherings, where public speakers of the one party or the other, discuss those delicate subjects of negro slavery, the true bearing of which they do not comprehend, and where they imbibe crude and disjointed notions of freedom, which only imperil the safety of the white, and the certain destruction of the black race.

Resolved, That we call upon our city

[illegible] TAMMANY SOCIETY.

The Democratic Society of Tammany, or Columbian [illegible] last night, according to custom, the [illegible] anniversary of the Battle of New-Orleans [illegible] great event.

The ball-room of old Tammany was specially fitted up for the occasion, and adorned in a style befitting such a festival.

The walls were completely interwoven with the national colors, over which were hung innumerable banners, interspersed with descriptive pictures and [illegible]. The ceiling was decorated with the national colors, the orchestra was draped with them, the doors were decked with them, and everything susceptible of ornament was enfolded in them. The monotony was relieved, however, and the general effect heightened by the pictorial embellishments which were tastefully arranged on the walls. On one side was an immense picture of the battle of New-Orleans. On the opposite wall was an emblematic representation of Liberty smiling on the oppressed nationalities of the old world, who are being introduced to her favorable consideration by Columbia. Each of the States was represented by her coat of arms. An excellent portrait of JACKSON adorned the centre. A warning against geographical parties hung near. Several portraits of other political celebrities, contemporaneous with him or with ourselves, were scattered here and there over the walls. Magnificent mirrors hung over the mantelpieces. Several fluttering allusions to the election of BUCHANAN varied the decorations on the upper end of the room. The entire ornamentation, in fine, was tastefully devised, the effect grand and imposing, and the general arrangements admirable.

The company was large—probably numbering three hundred ladies and gentlemen—and the personnel [illegible].

The ball, under the direction of Mr. TAYLOR as master of the ceremonies, opened at 9 o'clock, and was [illegible] great spirit until an early hour this morning. At 12½ o'clock the invited guests and officers of the Society withdrew to the supper-room, where a bountiful table was spread for their special accommodation. Col. DELAVAN presided.

[illegible] to initiate this department of the evening's festivities, he said:

GENTLEMEN: The Society has received many letters from various distinguished guests from all parts of the United States, regretting their inability to be present with us this evening. They are from Ex-President Martin Van Buren; Hon. James M. Buchanan, of Maryland; Hon. Philip Allen, United States Senate; Hon. George E. Pugh, United States Senate; Governor Wise, of Virginia; Hon. John Kelly, M. C., of New-York; Hon. A. E. Maxwell, M. C.; Hon. Jas. Dixon, M. C., of Maryland; Hon. Joseph Lane, late U. S. of Oregon; Hon. William B. Maclay, M. C. elect from of New-York; Hon. Israel T. Hatch, M. C. elect from Illinois; Hon. Reverdy Johnson, of Maryland; Hon. John Wheeler, M. C., of New-York; Hon. John A. Dix; Hon. C. C. Cambreleng, of Huntington, L. I.; Hon. J. K. Paulding, Hyde Park, N. Y.; Hon. Gouverneur Kemble, Cold Spring, N. Y.; Hon. Rodney Hill, Conn.; Hon. David S. Brewster, Troy, N. Y.; Hon. Greene C. Bronson; Hon. Colin M. Ingersoll, New-Haven, Conn.; Hon. Henry Hubbard, of New-Hampshire; Hon. John J. Paris, Syracuse, N. Y.; Hon. Samuel Wells, Portland, Me.; Hon. John C. Wright, Schenectady, N. Y.; Hon. Solomon G. Cutting, Buffalo, N. Y.; Hon. T. A. Osborn, Mayville, N. Y.; Hon. Wm. W. Reeve, Middletown, Orange County, N. Y.; Hon. Wm. B. Shaw, Geneva, N. Y.; Hon. Frederick Follet, Batavia, N. Y.; Hon. R. J. Raymond, &c., &c., &c.

With the above letters are some toasts offered, which I will read and drink to them in a lump and with a bumper.

By JAMES BUCHANAN, of Maryland:

The friends of the Union, North—the friends of the Union, everywhere; they have fought the good fight, they have kept the National faith, and they have won for themselves an imperishable glory.

By Hon. H. HAMMON, of New-Hampshire:

Our National Democracy—As it merits, so it will ever command the affection of the people. The new "Know-Nothing" converts, as they merit so they will receive the condemnation due to false devotedness.

By Hon. JOHN M. KEON, of St. Louis, Mo.:

Andrew Jackson—Honest, firm and patriotic; wise in the direct and a will to execute—a noble example to his countrymen, whether on the battle field or in the councils of State.

By Purser J. GEORGE HARRIS, U. S. Navy:

The Preservation of the Union—It can be permanently insured only by an affectionate adherance to the inalienable compromises of the Federal Union.

By BRERETON MCLEAN, Niagara County, New-York:

The Stability of Federalism—In all its phases as well marked and as conspicuous as the triumphant victory achieved over it by our gallant Democracy.

By C. B. FRANKLIN, New-York:

James Buchanan—The light of our Union. When on the 4th of March next it shall have been elevated to the apex of a nation's gratitude, its rays will fall, illumined with brilliancy and invigorating freshness, on every State of our Confederacy. Attracted by its brilliance, the down-trodden people of the Old World will be induced to seek a welcome and a refuge upon our happy shores.

By THOMAS J. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Old and Religious Liberty—The glory of man.

By JAMES MANN, Washington, D. C.:

The Union—General JACKSON said it "must and shall be preserved." The people, in the election of JAMES BUCHANAN, reiterated the glorious sentiment.

GOVERNOR WISE: The recurrence of another anniversary of the glorious Battle of New-Orleans has called us together this evening. It is well known to you that the Society of Tammany has for many years been in the habit of celebrating that glorious event—one that shed so much lustre upon the annals of our beloved country. Although the great captain, warrior and statesman of that day has been taken from our midst, still his spirit is with us to cheer us on in the glorious cause of Democratic principles, of which he was the great exponent. I need but say that this Society (of which he was one of its most cherished members) guide themselves in cherishing his glorious deeds and emulating his bright examples. Gentlemen, as we have much intellectual business before us, I will not detain you with a long speech. So please fill your glasses for the first regular toast:

In the interval between the fourth and 5th regular toasts, DANIEL E. DELEVAN, Esq., offered the following, which was drank amid rapturous applause:

The Minister from Nicaragua, Don Fermin Ferrer, and the Government he represents—May they cement the union of Anglo-American and Spanish-American Republics, even as the Isthmus of Nicaragua unites our double Continent, and brings into harmonious connection the Oceans that wash its opposite shores.

After the applause had ceased, Don FERMIN FERRER replied through an interpreter.

The following gentlemen replied to the toasts respectively:

1. The Day we Celebrate—Memorable as the Anniversary of a Victory which drove from American soil the last foreign enemy that has set foot upon it—placed the volunteer soldier on the pinnacle of military fame, and brought into bold relief a citizen who reflected equal glory upon American arms by his valor and skill, and upon American statesmanship by his wisdom and integrity.

Hon. W. H. LUNDEY responded.

2. The Memory of Andrew Jackson—The profound and patriotic Statesman—the brilliant and successful Soldier—the true and faithful friend. Time, that proves all things, has conquered the prejudice of his most bitter opponents, and all unite with us in doing him honor.

Gen. GREEN, of Texas, responded.

3. The President of the United States—Elevated by the Democracy of the Union to the high trust of Chief Magistrate, he has justified their confidence, by protecting the rights of American citizens abroad, and their property at home.

Gen. WALLBRIDGE responded.

4. The Governor of the State of New-York.

Hon. ELISHA F. PERRY, responded.

5. The City of New-York—The Commercial Capitol of the United States; a prodigy of progress, even in a country whose entire growth is almost miraculous. She is equally prominent in the commanding force with which she sustains the Constitution and the Union, sending an able and united Democratic delegation to Congress and to the State Legislature, and filling with vigilant Democratic sentinels every post in the City and County Government.

JOHN VAN BUREN responded.

6. James Buchanan, the President-elect—Clear in intellect, mature in judgment, ready and fearless in danger, of unswerving patriotism and stainless private character; he has passed through the fiery furnace of Republican and Know-Nothing persecution without the smell of fire upon his garments. Thirty years of brilliant public service in the highest offices of State furnish a sure guarantee that he will well and wisely administer the government of the country.

[illegible] responded.

7. John C. Breckinridge, Vice-President elect—An honest, fearless and patriotic statesman, "without reproach and without fear." We welcome patriotic old Kentucky to the Democratic ranks, under her young and gallant leader.

Gen. JOHN C. MARTIN responded.

8. The Army and Navy of the United States—Both [illegible]

[illegible] Orleans and [illegible] the American arms on land.

Gen. [illegible] responded.

9. The Memory of Washington—Founded on Truth as its own solid foundation, God and Religious Liberty the cling of his heart, it has ever proved true to the interests and welfare of his country, with the Constitution of the United States, and devoted to the strict construction of that sacred instrument, it has ever sternly resisted all attempts to violate any of its provisions, to subvert them to purposes of prescription or fanaticism, to weaken or dissolve the Union they secure, or to trample upon their guarantee of equal rights to the confederated States, whatever may be their domestic institutions, and to all our citizens, whatever their religion and wherever their birth.

Hon. JOHN COCHRANE responded.

10. The Memory of Lewis B. Shepard, late Grand Sachem—Eminent as a lawyer, active and influential as a Democrat, beloved as a man.

Hon. WM. MCMURRAY responded.

11. The National Victory of the 4th of November, 1856—Accomplished through the Democratic organization and in the person of Democratic candidates. It excited the joy and warmed the hearts of patriots of all parties and lovers of Liberty everywhere, and prostrated domestic and foreign foes no less signally than the triumph at New-Orleans, which we celebrate to-night.

Geo. F. THOMPSON responded.

12. An [uncorruptible and enlightened] Press—The evidence and support of free institutions.

Mr. C. SWACKHAMER responded.

13. Woman—First and last on our lips, and always in our hearts.

The speeches elicited warm applause.

MARINE ITEMS.

Severe Weather—A Frost-Bitten Crew.

If there is any one at all incredulous as to the terribly severe weather now experienced by vessels coming in to this coast, he should have taken a look at the barkentine Horace Beale, yesterday lying at the pier foot of Maiden-lane. This vessel arrived, yesterday, from Alexandria, Va., deeply loaded with corn and flour. She is one mass of ice, from the end of her jibboom to the break of the quarter-deck; her bowsprit and headstays, and her forward rigging, ten feet from the deck, are literally loaded with ice, each brace or bowline being as large as a man's arm, and the shrouds and deadeyes as large as a barrel. She was once obliged to run into the Gulf Stream, to melt off the immense masses of ice that had accumulated upon her, and which made it impossible to work the ship. Four of the crew have been badly frost-bitten, one of them, "WASH REEVES," of Alexandria, Va., has his feet and toes so badly affected that it is feared it may make him a cripple for life. We saw the poor fellow and conversed with him on board; he has a family in Alexandria, and is anxious to go to them at once. We were sorry to notice that he had received no medical advice or assistance since his arrival. The hands of most of the crew are black and swollen from the effects of frost. The vessel was taken in tow by a tug below the Highlands, and brought to the City, when she was fallen in with by the tug. She was so much incased in ice not a rope could be used in working the vessel, and it was with great difficulty the crew were able to roll up and secure the sails.

A STEAM WHALER.

A screw steamship (according to the New-Bedford Mercury) is being fitted out at Providence for the northern whale fishery. Captain SOWLE, formerly of the ship Sea, of Warren, R. I., is to command her.

A telegraphic dispatch from Baltimore states that a large Eastern schooner is ashore on the Man-of-War Shoals.

A NEW VESSEL.

The bark C. E. Tilton is a new snug vessel of about 450 tons, built by THOMAS A. ESKRIDGE, Sixteenth-street, for Messrs. WAKEMAN & DIMON, and is intended for the trade between Oregon and China. She is 124 feet long, 12 feet deep, and 31¼ feet beam, clipper model, rigged with double topsail yards. She is built with heavy white oak frame, with strong breast-hooks and apron of the same material; a heavy keleson, 28x14 inches, with upright stancheons strongly clamped to it and to the deck beams. There is a rise between the water ways, and plankshire of about 12 inches, and extra stancheon, forming bulwarks about four feet high. The stern-posts are carried up from the keelson to plankshire, the same as the bow, which is a new improvement introduced by Mr. ESKRIDGE, and imparts great strength to what has hitherto been regarded as the weakest portion of the ship's frame. By this plan the old-fashioned stern frame above the transom is abolished, without in the least affecting the graceful curves required for that part of the ship.

Altogether she is one of the strongest vessels of her tonnage yet built in this City. She has clear decks, 90 feet in length, with poop cabin, and topgallant forecastle, so arranged that no water can penetrate into the men's quarters from the hawse pipes. This large deck room gives ample space for carrying the largest class spars, for which there is a growing trade between Oregon and China. Messrs. W. & D. carried the first cargo of this kind from Oregon to China in 1851.

She has first-rate cabin accommodations for ten passengers; price of passage $175 to Portland, Oregon. She will double Cape Horn in the most favorable season of the year, and Captain J. W. BRIGGS, her commander, expects to make the passage in 110 days, which, judging from her model, she will easily accomplish. She is the only vessel now up for Oregon direct, and is about half loaded.

WIND, WEATHER, ETC.

The ship Empress of the Seas, from Callao, arrived on Wednesday night, dragged her anchor in the East River and is somewhat damaged by the ice. Her ensign was set, union down, when she was taken in tow by steamtugs Huntress and Achilles, and moored at Pier No. 87 East River.

Extract from a letter received by Messrs. BIRD & NEILSON, from Capt. BENNETT, dated Barnegat, Jan. 5, about ship New-York, says: We arrived here last night, and came to off the ship. The sea rough and wind to the northwest. Went on board of ship; at work cutting decks, and have made a fine commencement; got out a lot of damaged goods, some coils rigging, and seven cases merchandise; got up purchases, and hoped in the morning to put some cargo on board of the schooner Fishterman. The last storm has not changed the position of the ship, and I think it will take a heavy storm to break her up, the railroad iron is all clear, and I hope to get a good cargo of it before the ship breaks up. About 140 pieces Rosewood has been saved from the British Bark Texas.

The steam-tugs W. H. Webb and Achilles were not successful in getting off the ship Cultivator. She will discharge more of her cargo. She leaks some today, and is cut into by the ice.

The Oldenburg bark Union, from Bremen, anchored in the North River, dragged her anchor and had her rudder carried away by the ice; she is also badly cut. She was towed into a pier at Jersey City by steam-tug Huntress.

The following is the cargo of the ship Cultivator: 21,165 bushels corn, 8,121 bushels wheat, 1,562 barrels flour, 137 tierces rice, 636 boxes bacon, 180 boxes cheese, 365 tierces, 375 barrels lard, 968 bales cotton, 58 tons fustic, 226 tons logwood, and 41 hhds. and 95 tierces tobacco.

The bark Flight, for Savannah, is ashore back of Governors' Island, carried there by the ice.

NEW-YORK CITY.

$500 for a Portrait of Mayor Wood.

Mr. C. L. ELLIOTT is engaged in painting a half-length portrait of Mayor WOOD, and will have it finished in the course of a few weeks. The subject is represented standing with left hand resting on the hip—an attitude supposed best to express the Mayor's predominant traits of character. On Wednesday evening a resolution was presented in the Board of Councilmen and referred, directing the purchase of this portrait when completed at a price not exceeding $500—to be placed in the Governor's Room, City Hall. The full-length portraits of ex-Govs. BOUCK and HUNT, and the half-length of ex-Mayor KINGSLAND, already there, are the work of this same artist. A painter has a broad field to select from in getting up a likeness of His Honor. Between the Tribune's Mayor and the Journal of Commerce's, between the Mayor that used to be shown up in HERRICK'S Atlas and the favorite of the New-York boys at the last election, it will be difficult to portray a face that somebody won't say is like.

Chamber of Commerce.

The quarterly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held last evening in Clinton Hall, P. PERIT in the Chair, Mr. A. LEARY, Secretary, pro tem. The meeting was larger than usual.

The following gentlemen were elected members of the Chamber: EDWIN R. WOODHULL, HENRY NEMRITH. Mr. JOHN P. FERRIS was elected a member of the Committee of Arbitration. A communication was received and read from Senator FESS, stating that he had presented their memorial to the Senate in relation to Diamond Reef, and that it had been referred to the Committee on Commerce. J. DE PEYSTER OGDEN, from the Committee on Harbor Improvements, made a report, which was accepted, and after some remarks was laid on the table.

In allusion to some portions of the Report, Mr. [illegible]

[illegible] Governors' Island, drawing over 18 feet of water at certain stages of tide.

A memorial to the Legislature, was adopted, upon the Usury Law, advising the enactment of a law compelling the forfeiture of the whole interest involved in cases of usurious transaction.

Mr. JOHN MURRAY read the form of a memorial, asking that individuals might have the same privileges extended to them as are allowed to Corporations.

MATHEW MAURY addressed the Chamber in favor of the establishment of a Meteorological Observatory, to be established in New-York, the site of which was proposed to be on the Battery, and introduced a resolution. GEO. W. BLUNT opposed the resolution and the whole project as unnecessary, and as ungracious toward the Dudley Observatory, in which many of our most liberal citizens had become interested. It was laid on the table.

Mr. D. OGDEN called attention to the bill introduced into Congress by GUY R. PELTON, Chairman of the Committee of Commerce, requiring ships in the merchant service to carry a certain number of apprentices, according to their respective tonnage, and advocated the importance and expediency of the bill. M. H. GRINNELL also strongly advocated the bill, paying a high compliment to its author, and making no objection to the compulsory feature of the bill.

A resolution was finally adopted requesting the State Senators and the Representatives from this District to urge the passage of the bill, and directing the Secretary to forward the same to Washington.

Adjourned.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

FILLING UP THE VACANCIES.

The VACANCIES in the Police Department are being rapidly filled, now that we have Commissioner Russell in office. It is said that, at the meeting of the Commissioners, on Tuesday last, thirty-five new appointments were made. Of this number eighteen have been sworn in, given stars, and enrolled in Squad Q, (awkward squad,) for drill and general routine, under command of Sergeant-Major Wines and Sergeant Murphy. They are young men, and stalwart enough to use their locusts with good effect, when occasion requires. They will soon be sent to their respective Wards, for patrol duty. The accession will, we hope, prove beneficial, by checking the prowlings of the "garrote" gentry, who half choke and wholly rob the unwary traveler, before he can say one.

GARROTE ROBBERS.

Speaking of these garrote robbers, it may be well to mention that they still continue in the full tide of successful operation. Although it seems that Broadway is their base of operations, not one of them has been yet arrested. They are looked upon as daring buccaneers, but when we consider the very small number of police on night patrol, they (the buccaneers) do not display such recklessness after all. A Policeman, whose beat extends up Broadway from Chambers to Canal streets, should not be held strictly accountable for every "garrote" robbery that may take place within the limits mentioned, especially when we reflect that the poor fellow gets for his laborious duties only $700 a year, and has to wait months for his pay in the Winter time, because the appropriation "is all out," and the Supervisors are too busy to meet. Policemen, however, are only policemen, and if the Corporation won't pay them their hard-earned wages, why, they can borrow (perhaps) at usurious rates, or get "tick" from the kind-hearted corner grocery-man, who will give long credits at high rates!

But those terrible "garrote" robbers;—the policeman who succeeds in nabbing one of 'em will be made famous and ought to be detailed on special duty. Or would it not be well to offer a reward for the capture of one of them—dead or alive—to "chew up" at the Chief's office? We know at least two gentlemen of jolly habits and late hours, who will contribute their quota to carry out the last suggestion. One of the two gentlemen to whom we allude was garroted out of a diamond breast-pin and a fabulous amount of money. This was especially unfortunate in his case, as he had "a note to meet that very day." The other victim—a literary character—was seized by three bandits (he swears they were three, although it was 9 in the morning, and he had just left some friends) and after being roughly handled was robbed of his night-key and a wallet containing—"nary red"—but sundry little bills from impudent tailors, importunate washerwomen and suspicious landladies. He was robbed, nevertheless—and that was more than enough, especially as he had to walk the streets all night and "Charley had shut up" long before.

A medical gentleman, one of the latest garroted, avers that these highwaymen carry in their sleeves semi-circular pieces of wood, made expressly to fit about their victims, throats. He speaks from experience, of course, but, nevertheless, it is impertinent to venture, with an exclamation, "What wonderful choking!" O! these wonderful garrote men!

HE DIDN'S WANT THEM TO FALL.

Wm. C. Hampton, a boy of 14 years, was "brought up," yesterday, [illegible] Barclay-street.

The boy gave his residence, No. 201 Seventh-street, and said, he was a bookbinder [illegible] trade. In reference to the charge, he said [illegible] the boxes to prevent them from falling." His kind intentions were not at all appreciated. Justice OGDEN looked him up to answer in default of $500 bail.

ASSAULT WITH A CHEESE-KNIFE.

Henry Hinkel, a German, keeper of a grocery store in Gold-street, was also brought before Justice OGDEN for assaulting with a cheese-knife one William Purtele, whom he cut in the shoulder. The wound, though an ugly-looking one, was declared not serious by the physician, who said, however, that had it extended half an inch either way, must have resulted fatally. The offence was committed on Wednesday night.

Hinkel, in palliation of the act, said that Purtele came into his store and behaved very disorderly; that on being requested to go out, he became very abusive, and made an effort to commit violence, whereupon he (the prisoner) seized the knife in self-defence and cut the intruder. Purtele did not excite much sympathy, as he is known to be a bad fellow. The magistrate ordered Hinkel to give bail in the sum of $1,000 to answer. The necessary bond was promptly given.

SPURIOUS BILLS.

There are counterfeit Fives on the York (Pa.) Bank now in circulation in this City. A man giving his name as John Shaffrey is now in custody, for attempting to pass one of them in a Canal-street saloon. On being searched, six of these bills were found tied up in his cravat. An accomplice, who has succeeded in passing several bills of a smaller character, is looked for by the police.

DEPEND UPON IT SOLEMNLY.—If you have the consumption, Madam, your health will never be restored by the quack nostrums that depend upon manufactured certificates of cure for a sale and a celebrity! If you have the rheumatism, Sir, place no confidence in such deceitful assistance. And you, old man! tottering with the palsy; and you, young girl, whose neck is scarred with the scrofula or king's evil, never fancy such remedies will reach your case. There is but one thing can certainly, unmistakably, pleasantly, rapidly and inexpensively, expel all your maladies, make you well and joyous, and give you a new lease of life, and the hundreds of people snatched by it, in this City, from the brink of death, will testify to its superiority. It is indorsed by all the regular faculty, and called Dr. HENRY ANDERS' LIQUID IODINE, or PURE IODINE WATER, and sold at $1 a bottle, by ANDERS & FOSDICK, No. 3 Second-avenue, and No. 602 Broadway; C. H. RING, No. 192 Broadway; A. HALES, No. 45 Fulton-st., Brooklyn, and by all druggists.

THURSDAY, Jan. 8—P. M.

THE COMMERCE OF THE PORT OF NEW-YORK for the calendar year 1856 is now made complete by the Custom-House returns, rendered this afternoon of the business of the month of December, and we present the whole in one view, according to our usual custom. The feature most prominent in the following tables is the large and generally consistent increase in every department over the previous year—which was also a prosperous one. The single drawback is the heavy exportation of the [illegible] were to the positively [illegible] condition of the [illegible] which this country had the ability to participate in Gold in large quantities, which, under more equal circumstances, would not have been required until the ingathering of the new crops. In connection with this subject, we should be pleased, if space attended, to present, side by side with these and other trade returns, the very comprehensive Financial Reviews of the Year 1856, which, according to their annual practice, have just been issued in circular form by the leading firms of Brokers engaged in Continental negotiations, Messrs. DE COPPET & CO., and MARIE & KANZ. They have attracted much and well-deserved attention in the money circles, as well for the studied fidelity and care with which they are prepared for a Foreign constituency, as the cheerful and encouraging view which they present of the state and prospects of the country, for the satisfaction of our own people.

The Import of Foreign Goods at the port of New-York for December was:

| | |
|---|---|
| In dutiable goods, put on market | $7,380,499 |
| Dutiable goods warehoused | 2,424,241 |
| Free goods | 1,141,680 |
| Total | $11,746,369 |
| Against December, 1855 | [illegible] |

There was also sent out Foreign Specie to the value of $246,876.

The Exports in December were:

| | |
|---|---|
| Of Domestic Produce | $8,248,868 |
| Foreign reexported | 305,142 |
| Specie | 1,779,181 |
| Total | $10,403,992 |
| Against December, 1855 | 10,657,434 |

The Trade returns of the entire calendar year at this port are thus summed up:
